State Holstein title to Kelly Ned-Red again

BY WENDY WEHR

HARRISBURG -- When you go to a state Holstein show, you expect the top cows to all be there — in black and white. But sometimes expectations are dashed and a splash of red reigns in the Holstein show ring.

C Cala Hill Kelly Ned-Red returned to claim the senior and grand championships at the Holstein state spring show on Thursday in Harrisburg. Kelly Ned-Red, owned by Queens Manor, Jamestown, was also named grand champion at the state championship show last September.

Out of Cala Hill Dale-Red, Kelly Ned-Red is sired by Agro Acres Marquis Ned. Breeder of the fancy red cow was Robert Blair.

Kelly Ned-Red also earned production honors in her five-year-old class with a record of 25,268 pounds milk and 1010 pounds fat

Production to increase as dairy diversion ends?

BY JAMES H. EVERHART

The end of the 15-month dairy diversion program brings some hope of improved prices and a lot of uncertainty about the future of dairy production and profitability.

Experts interviewed by Lancaster Farming said they expect production figures to increase slightly following the end of diversion next week.

But they said the small production hikes — in the range of one to two percent — would most likely reflect improvements in the feed prices, rather than the release of products withheld from the market because of the producer-paid diversion program.

"There will be a spring flush, all right, but I don't see any flood," said Penn State Extention Agent Tom Jurchak. "If there is, it will be because of the feed-price-to-milk-price ratio, rather than the end of the diversion program."

The Middle Atlantic states, will be affected less than most other areas of the country, because of the low level of participation in the program, added James Fraher, economist for Interstate Milk Producers.

Only eight percent of Pennsylvania's dairy farmers signed up for the plan, agreeing to "divert" only about two percent of the state's milk production, Fraher said.

And much of the reduction of the past year, he added, could be attributed to the unfavorable feed price situation, rather than the voluntary reduction program.

Adds Penn State ag economist Jack J. Kirkland, "a lot of them saw the advantage in taking money for what they've already done."

Production in the future, the economists said, will be more strongly influenced by outside factors — like feed and milk prices — than by the end of the diversion plan.

Figures for February, in fact, indicated that milk production already has begun to climb. That month's figures, available only recently, indicate production has increased about .8 percent, the first increase observed since the program began.

Fraher in particular discounted the possibility that milk production would increase dramatically

Morris, Wenger introduce farmland preservation bill

BY JACK HUBLEY

MECHANICSBURG — Members of both the State House and Senate unveiled legislation this week that would allocate state funds for the purchase of conservation easements. Such easements would allow prime farmland to remain in production by paying landowners the difference between the land's agricultural value and its value for development.

The announcement came Wednesday on the farm of Robert and Michael Berkheimer, Mechanicsburg, where prime sponsors Sen. Noah Wenger (R-Ephrata) and Rep. Sam Morris (D-Pottstown) held a news conference to introduce the bill. Also present were co-sponsors Rep. Carmel Sirianni and Sen. Patrick Stapleton.

The proposed legislation would amend Act 43, of 1981, which authorized the creation of agricultural areas, but made no provisions for the actual purchase of development rights other than through county funding.

"This will have the state become a partner, along with local governments and the counties, in providing funding for purchasing conservation easements and assuring that at least some of our prime farmland will continue to be available for agriculture in the future," Wenger said.

And to slow the steady loss of the commonwealth's farmland, Wenger, Morris and their co-

With the end of dairy diversion comes a new market and a new set of realities for dairy farmers.

Lancaster Farming takes a look at the dairy picture from the grass roots level this week, focusing on several individual farming operations.

To Plan For Oats Planting

Some farmers are considering the use of feed oats for planting this spring, but this may not be a good idea. Feed oats may contain quackgrass, bindweed and other weed seeds. Planting feed oats will generally result in lower yields.

You also have the problem that any weed seeds planted will be a problem for years to come. Keep in mind that high quality seed is the smallest part of producing a crop. So, saving a few cents by using inferior or weedy seed doesn't make a lot of sense.

On the other hand, home grown seed of varieites proven successful on the farm can be cleaned, treated and planted if the germination is 80 percent or better. You can use the old "Rag Doll" germination method where you place the seed between two pieces of burlap — roll it and keep it moist and warm. Then count the seeds that germinate against the total and determine the percent germination.

To Be Aware of the LT Problem

It seems like when one problem is brought under control another one shows up. Avian influenza is behind us but LT (laryngotracheitis) is showing up, mostly in Lebanon County. As of March 15, 25 cases of LT or LT-like disease had been reported. According to the veterinarins, this is a very "hot" strain with mortality near 25 percent in some cases.

This means that we really need to tighten up bio-security. A couple of important areas are (a) insist that salesmen, deliverymen, customers and pick-up people absolutely stay out of houses, (b) provide obvious outside receptacles for feed slips, invoices and messages, (c) know your pullet score and their vaccination program, (d) no visits to other poultry farms and (e) rodent control - don't forget stray dog and cat control.

Let's do all we can to bring this problem under control.

To Provide Farm Security

Thefts and vandalism on farms is on the increase. This is very difficult to prevent because of the various items around farm buildings and homes; also, the number of buildings and places to enter are many. However, we suggest that every farmer takes some steps in protecting his machinery, tools, livestock and supplies. The automatic lights that come on at dusk and go off at dawn should be of real value in discouraging burglars. There are also many new sensing devices that detect movement around the premises.

Watch dogs are also very useful in detecting strangers around the property. Shops, garages and other smaller buildings should be kept locked when possible.

The identification of animals by tags, branding and photographs is very helpful. It is also a good idea to mark all machinery and tools with a permanent identification number. The best number to use is your drivers license number preceded by DL PA (Drivers License, Pennsvylania).

Remember, Social Security numbers are non-retrievable so it's best not to use it. Farm thefts are on the increase so farmers should take steps to protect their property.

To Make Pastures Produce

The best way to improve permanent pasture is to apply lime and fertilizer, practice rotational grazing and clip them regularly. This is quicker, cheaper and involves less risk than tearing up the old sod and reseeding. Most permanent pastures have sufficient seed of desirable grass species. The only thing they need is a little tender loving care and the opportunity to grow, and to recover from grazing pressures.

Thus, fertility and rotational grazing are very beneficial. The more paddocks you have, the better it is. If your acreage is limited for your size herd, restrict the amount of time cattle and livestock are permitted to graze. Don't let them trample the grass unnecessarily by allowing them to roam freely over the pasture while not grazing. After a paddock has been grazed, it can be clipped to control weed growth and to keep the grass young and nutritious. This is also a good time to apply fertilizer and necessary herbicides, while allowing the grass to recover prior to being grazed again.

THE BIBLE SPEAKS

BY LAWRENCE W. ALTHOUSE

FREE CROSSES! March 31, 1985

Background Scripture:
John 19:17-42.

Devotional Reading:
John 19:38-42.

If the story of Jesus were being created for TV or the silver screen today, we would almost certainly want to rewrite the passion narrative. As Jesus arrives at Golgotha, and in-the- nick-of-time pardon would arrive by way of a breathless messenger from Pontius Pilate, or Jesus' disciples would mount a massive rescue operation to snatch him from the jaws of death. Or perhaps we would see that Jesus only appeared to die on the cross and was resuscitated by his disciples after taken down from the cross and spirited to a safe place.

HUMILIATION

But that isn't the way the writers of the four gospels tell the story. In Matthew, Mark, Luke and John there is no rescue, no pardon and no faked death. The cross was real, the pain and humiliation and, above all, the tragic death on it was real. None of the four gospel accounts mince words about just how awful a punishment it was.

John, for example, does not hide the humiliation of the cross. He is nailed to a cross, the most humiliating form of execution at that time, and hung between two common criminals. Pilate's inscription, whatever his intention, was a mockery: "Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews." His garments were taken from him and divided among the soldiers in the crucifixion detail. His cloak they gambled for.

Futhermore, John wants us to know Jesus really suffered and died on the cross. This was not play-acting to satisfy our religious drama. This was not a cosmic charade played-out to elicit religious devotion. At one point, Jesus cries out, "I thirst" and his physical suffering is apparent.

REALLY DEAD

At last, Jesus says "It is finished," and John tells us, "he bowed his head and gave up his spirit" (19:30). Shortly after, one of the soldiers from the crucifixion detail thrusts a spear into Jesus' side to make sure he is really dead.

Yet, despite all of this — humanity operating on its lowest, most vile level — Jesus does not come across to us as either humiliated or broken. It is as though he is showing all of us how to die rightly, how to meet the reality of the cross in our own lives.

Clarence Jordan, who wrote the Cotton Patch New Testament, was getting a red-carpet tour of a well-heeled church. Taking Jordan outside, the minister pointed to a huge cross atop the steeple. "That cross alone cost us ten thousand dollars," boasted the minister. "You got cheated," was Jordan's surprising reply, "times were when Christians could get them for free."

Today we live in times in which, if a Christian is really following his Lord, crosses are still free!

Shipping restrictions hurt U.S. ag trade

WASHINGTON — Laws mandating preferential use of American cargo vessels are having the same effect on grain export initiatives as an embargo, according to a spokeman for the fertilizer industry.

Gary D. Myers, president of The Fertilizer Institute, said that his association will join with other agricultural organizations and congressional leaders to seek changes in cargo preference statutes which impede agricultural exports. His comments came in reponse to a February court decision which said that USDA export initiatives such as blended credit must favor U.S. vessels over generally less-expensive foreign ships.

Late last month, U.S. District Court Judge June L. Green ruled that the U.S. Department of Agriculture had acted improperly last year when it exempted a $536 million blended credit wheat agreement from cargo preference requirements. The Cargo Preference Act requires 50 percent of government-backed cargo to be shipped on U.S. vessels. The court action has resulted in USDA's suspension of the blended credit program.

"Once again, an embargo has been placed on a segment of U.S. agricultural exports," Myers said, "but this time it is being called 'cargo preference'." The industry spokesman said farmers are "again being asked to shoulder the burden of something for which they are not responsible." He called cargo preference laws a hidden subsidization of the U.S. maritime industry at the expense of America's farmers, and said a legislative remedy must be sought.

The attractive benefits of programs such as blended credit, he said, are offset by higher U.S. shipping costs, thus making such deals unattractive to foreign buyers.

"Congressional leaders who are concerned about the current state of the farm economy could do more for farmers through repeal of cargo preference laws than virtually any other single action," Myers said.

Dairy Expo opens today at Penn State

UNIVERSITY PARK — A dairy judging contest kicks off Penn State's Dairy Science Club's 60th annual Dairy Exposition.

The Exposition consists of a series of contests including today's invitational Dairy Judging Contest and a Dairy Princess contest on April 10. It concludes with fitting and showing competitions on Show Day on April 27 in the Ag Arena on Penn State's University Park Campus.

This year, the Dairy Expo is dedicated to Arthur W. Nesbitt, president of Nasco International, Fort Atkinson, Wisconsin. Nesbitt received a bachelor of science degree in agricultural economics from Penn State in 1950.

Judith A. Harding, a senior from Brookville, is coordinating this year's Expo and Lawrence Brown, a junior from Forestville, New York, is her assistant. Both are majoring in dairy production in the College of Agriculture at Penn State.

Pennsylvania 4-H and FFA members as well as amateur and professional student judges from Penn State, compete for individual and team awards during the Dairy Judging Contest. Registration begins at 9:30 a.m. in the Penn State Dairy Barns and judging begins at 10:00 a.m.

Dairy production students, William Zollers, Jr., a senior from Mertztown, and J. Craig Williams, a junior from Middletown, are chairing the judging contest and have scheduled 12 official judges to place classes and score comments. Judges are Penn State alumni with an interest in dairy.

Participants will be judged in the five major dairy breeds, Ayrshire, Brown Swiss, Guernsey, Holstein and Jersey. Contestants will have 12 minutes to judge the classes and an additional three minutes to give their reasons. Individual and team awards will be made at the Dairy Expo Banquet in Penn State's Hetzel Union Building on April 27.

Kimberly G. Kriebel, this year's Dairy Princess and a junior in dairy production from Millerstown, is coordinating the April 10 Dairy Princess contest. The princess will be selected from members of the Penn State Dairy Science Club on the basis of speaking ability, poise, service to the College of Agriculture, and knowledge of the dairy industry.

The final event of the Penn State Dairy Exposition is Show Day on April 27. Scott A. Hauseman, a senior in agricultural business management from Boyertown, is show manager and Michael L Carr, a freshman in dairy production from Somerset, is the assistant manager. They will choose about 150 University cattle to be fitted and shown by Penn State students.

Special events of Show Day include a calf dressing contest, milk chugging contests, and a milking contest organized by Norma Lash, a junior in agricultural business management from West Newton, and her assistant, Annett Shirey, a sophomore in agricultural education from Beavertown.

Show Day is a popular event for students in all colleges at Penn State.

THE FUTURE FARMERS OF AMERICA

One of the real regrets that I have come to feel is that there was no organization like the FFA in the high schools of my youth. That came long after I graduated. I think the girls had something like Future Homemakers Society, but the boys were either out for football or else faded into the woodwork and kept quiet. I was among those who were never heard and seldom seen.

When writers and orators and politicians feel the urge to ask whether there is any future for farming, they explore and expound on the economics of agriculture, or on the world political situation, and they deplore the demise of the family farm. All good and valid subject matter for discussion. But they seldom mention the great drive and motivation that propels so many young boys and girls toward a career in agriculture. Thank God that drive is still alive and strong as ever!

One of the reasons for keeping alive the enthusiasm for farming in young people is the Future Farmers of America. Along with the 4-H program, these organizations do much to foster and stimulate a continued desire to live the good life that is only possible in rural America. FFA is not only a side effect of the vocational agriculture program in the high schools, it is a great source of stimulation to excel in everything that is tackled. The key to its success in stimulating a continuing interest is the way that FFA encourages competition among the students, and rewards them for their efforts.

Competition is the ultimate key to success of our democratic way of life. It not only makes the game of life and learning more fun, but it also encourages us to go for the rewards that are offered. Stop to think of it; all through life everyone is looking for some kind of reward for their effort. To achieve any reward in a competitive world requires extra effort. Those who prefer to fade back into the walls are not adequately conditioned to compete for and earn the rewards. The first rewards may be small and inconsequential, but they pave the way for the real ones that ultimately build confidence and leadership.

I've just completed a round of awards and achievement banquets that is a yearly event in our county high schools. The thing that is most impressive about these events is the enthusiasm and gusto exhibited by the officers and member of FFA chapters. There is just no denying the great value of the leadership training that is manifest in the conduct of their rituals. It is a natural result of the competitive spirit fostered by their teams in public speaking, parliamentary procedure, and salesmanship. The competition begins within each class and extends finally to county, state and national groups.

And within each agricultural enterprise, and there are many available, every individual has a chance to excel in his or her chosen projects. But it is the group spirit that is most fascinating and inspiring, because that is what really builds the will to cooperate with their fellows, and support and enhance each one's individual endeavor. No one can achieve his or her best without support and encouragement from friends and fellow students. That is where real leadership begins.

I salute all those dedicated and hard working ag instructors that have devoted their careers to helping young people get a good start in life. If I ever have the urge to address the question of the future of agriculture, I'll know where to begin. I'll just say this:

"Take a look at the Future Farmers of America. There are nearly fifty of them in each high school in our county. Even those that eventually choose a career other than ag have learned lessons in competitive achievement that fit them to be future leaders. And those who stay in farming will be the agricultural leaders of the future. And the future of farming is largely in their hands."

Starter fertilizers help corn off to good start

Starter fertilizers can help get a corn plant off to a good start, particularly when the farmer is using no-tillage practices.

"This early application of fertilizer supplies nutrients to the corn seedling, thereby establishing a good root system," said Dr. Douglas Beegle, Extension Agronomist at The Pennsylvania State University. "This can result in greater yields, even in fields with existing high soil fertility levels."

Starter fertilizers are particularly effective under no-tillage conditions because soils are cooler and wetter due to the presence of crop residue, which acts as an insulating mulch. Cold, wet soils decrease contact between the plant root and immobile nutrients in the soil. This can be corrected by placing a small amount of fertilizer where it can be readily taken up by the seedling, the Penn State Agronomist pointed out.

Generally, the material used as starter fertilizer should have a high phosphate ratio and be water soluble. For optimum effectiveness, the phosphate should be in combination with ammonium nitrogen.

"Urea-containing materials should not be used in starter fertilizers and diammonium phosphate should be used with caution because both materials react in the soil to produce free ammonia. This can be harmful to germinating seeds and seedlings", Dr. Beegle emphasized.

The actual analysis of the starter fertilizer is not critical as long as it meets ratios such as 1-2-1, 1-3-1 or 1-4-2. Granulated, blended and fluid fertilizer also can be used effectively as starter fertilizers if used in correct combinations.

"Only a small amount of fertilizer is required and phosphorus is usually the only nutrient that can be applied totally in the starter band. Banded phosphorus is about twice as effective as broadcasted phosphorus in the short term, but the long-term is about the same," he said.

Dr. Beegle cautioned that problems can arise when too much starter fertilizer is used. High rates increase the potential for salt injury. The rule of thumb is not more than 70 pounds of total nitrogen and phosphorus be applied per acre if the nutrients are placed two inches beside and two inches below the seed. If the fertilizer is placed closer, then the total amount should be lowered.

"Farmers often have problems getting fertilizer two inches below the seed when using the no-till system," the Penn State specialist noted. "Many remove the fertilizer coulters from the planters and simply dribble the fertilizer over the seed row. This method has drawbacks but is better than eliminating the starter fertilizer."

Other farmers place fertilizer directly with the seed. This placement is called "pop-up" and no more than 50 pounds per acre of total fertilizer should be applied when using this method.

"Research data has indicated that the "pop-up" starter fertilizer placement in no-till corn gives as good or better seedling phosphorus uptake and grain yields as traditional methods. It also helps avoid some of the problems often encountered when trying to get the planter in the ground, since only one opening is required to place the seed and the fertilizer," Dr. Beegle said.

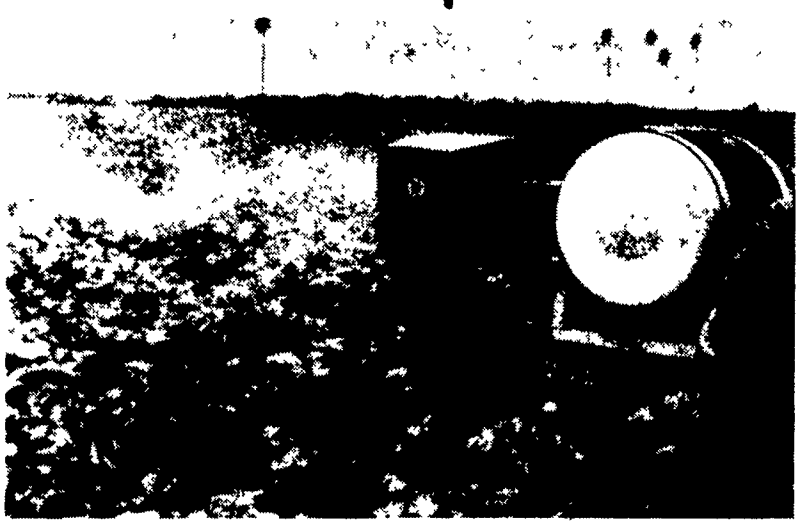
Automatic Micro-Mist Sprayer Controls Droplet Size



The Automatic Micro-Mist Concentrate Sprayer can be powered by the tractor pto for use on rowcrops, vegetables and orchards.

The Automatic Micro-Mist Concentrate Sprayer is a faster, more efficient, economical alternative to conventional boom and aerial spraying of rowcrops, vegetables and orchards.

It takes mist blowing techniques a step further by giving the operator the ability to control the diameter of the spray droplets and choose the diameter best for each particular spraying application.

Controlling droplet diameter results in increased effectiveness and reduced materials cost.

The smaller droplets of the Micro-Mister coat all sides of the target evenly, due to the powerful turbulence produced by the unit. The Micro-Mister effectively coats the undersides of leaves, reaches inside trees, even coats the back sides of fruit.

The compact size and the utillzation of chemical concentrates by the Micro-Mister offers many advantages. The unit comes in models that can be powered by PTO on small tractors, or a gasoline powered skid unit that slides into the bed of any pickup. Because the Micro-Mister eliminates the need for cumbersome water hauling equipment that requires additional manpower and time-consuming stops for refilling, the Automatic Micro-Mister saves both time and money.

The Automatic Micro-Mister can offer effective coverage up to 250 feet, depending on application, and can operate at speeds up to 12 m.p.h., with no dangerous overspray or drift.

NEDCO sues N.Y. milk handlers

SYRACUSE, N.Y. – NEDCO has filed suit against Empire Cheese, Inc., (a subsidiary of H.P. Hood) and Elmhurst Milk and Cream Co., Inc. The two separate lawsuits were filed last week in State Supreme Court in Syracuse, alleging that Elmhurst and Empire Cheese are illegally picking up milk from producers currently under contract with NEDCO.

The suit against Empire Cheese requests damages of $250,000 and seeks an injunction ordering Empire to cease any further efforts to pick up milk of farmers under contract to NEDCO. Most of the producers named in the suit against Empire are located in and around Cayuga County.

According to NEDCO Chief Executive Officer, Dean McCormac, NEDCO has also charged Elmhurst Milk and Cream Co. with illegally violating membership contracts, requesting damages in the amount of $150,000. Producers named in the suit are concentrated in Herkimer County.

McCormac noted that the lawsuits result from the illegal defection of a number of NEDCO producers in January 1985, due to negative publicity about NEDCO's financial situation. He added that "Illegal terminations of NEDCO producer contracts have completely stopped. As many as 50 percent of the farmers who left during that period have returned to NEDCO, and more are returning every day."

The NEDCO C.E.O. added that these lawsuits are necessary because Empire Cheese and Elmhurst Milk and Cream Co. have refused to honor membership contracts between producers and NEDCO, which is a violation of New York State Law.

Farm Bureau advances plan for dairy price supports

WASHINGTON – The nation's largest farm organization is asking for a dairy program in the 1985 Farm Bill that will be more responsive to market conditions and will not continue to offer production incentives when market signals indicate that production should decrease.

Testifying, on behalf of the American Farm Bureau Federation before the Senate Agriculture Committee, Peter Curra, President of the Maine Farm Bureau and a member of the AFBF board of directors, recommended revision of the dairy program in 1985 farm legislation to "adjust support prices according to market signals derived from average price history and to levels of government purchases of dairy products." In this manner, market forces will provide communications between producers and consumers, while government programs give assistance to orderly marketing of dairy products.

"The dairy industry does not exist in a vacuum, but must be considered, in the 1985 farm bill, within the context of its interaction with livestock and feed sectors," said the Maine dairyman.

Farm Bureau recommends that the dairy purchase program be continued in the new bill, Curra said, but that the support rate should be set at 90 percent of the average of the previous three years' all-milk price, adjusted on Oct. 1 of each marketing year. This procedure will make the program more responsive to market conditions.

A further recommendation is for adjustments to the support rate if government purchases do not meet desired levels, according to a schedule of purchases from a low of 3 billion pounds annually, to 7.99 billion.

If purchases reach or exceed 8 billion pounds during a marketing year, Farm Bureau supports granting discretionary authority for the Secretary of Agriculture to adjust the support price, by no more than three percent, on April 1 of that marketing year and for any subsequent six-month period that purchases are projected to exceed that level.

"This program would remove the discretion to alter the program according to political considerations and instead provide support prices that are determined by indicators of market conditions," Curra said.

The Maine farmer also pointed out that the 3.3 million member farm organization's dairy policy is developed by dairymen along with other producers, and fits the broad general framework supported by Farm Bureau to maximize income opportunities, reduce overproduction, ensure ample supplies of farm products at competitive prices and provide a supply reduction program to be implemented when carryover of any commodity exceeds workable levels.

Farm Bureau favors loan levels tied to market prices and conditions, for all major export commodities and continued use of target prices, for those commodities now using that feature, to provide income support for farmers during their adjustment to a market-responsive agriculture.

Leathermans of Schuylkill County

Dairy diversion relieved the pressure to produce

BY ROBIN PHILLIPS
Staff Correspondent

TAMAQUA — "I'm well satisfied," Bruce Leatherman, R1, Tamaqua, says about the milk diversion program. With the 15-month program drawing to a close this week, Leatherman states, "It afforded us a mental and physical break."

Leatherman and his family farm 500 acres and milk 50 to 80 registered and grade Holsteins with a few Jerseys scattered in the Schuylkill County herd. Cooperating with many government programs throughout his 17-year farming career, Leatherman chose to enroll in the dairy diversion program for a 27% reduction in his milk production.

"Being on the program afforded us the chance to get away more often as a family," he comments. He also adds, "Not everything can be measured in dollars and cents," referring to the relief from the pressure to continually produce more milk.

The Leatherman's--Bruce, Helen, and their three sons, Neal, age 15, Brent, age 12, and Timmy, age seven--provide most of the labor in their extensive farming operation. With only seasonal help hired as needed, Leatherman utilizes six stave silos in his silage based feeding program for his dairy herd.

Grain bins and dryers also enable him to cash crop some of his acreage. In normal years, income is split half and half between the dairy operation and the crops.

"With the extreme workload that we have," Leatherman continues, "we were under a lot of pressure." Enrollment in the milk diversion program was "just not as much worry," according to this dairyman.

"I don't want to offend anybody. I respect their opinions," Leatherman states about many farmers who resented the program, the intervention of the government, and the funding by the dairymen themselves. "We've cooperated with government programs," he states. Concerning the dairy diversion program, he adds, "We decided right from the start that we were going to abide by the rules."

"We were concerned about signing up because we merchandise breeding stock," Leatherman continues. He believes in purchasing good stock when it is available at a low price. This enables him to breed better bloodlines into his home stock, cull poor producers, and merchandise good, sound young animals.

"We realized that we would miss some sales," he admits. But he adds that while they were on the program, they were able to sell several animals to other producers on the program and were also fortunate enough to export several cows overseas. Getting many contacts through their local ASCS office, Leatherman adds, "They (ASCS) were very cooperative."

The Leatherman family enjoyed the relaxed pace and chance to take time off together while they were on the dairy diversion program.

"One advantage we had was that we didn't have a base," Leatherman continues concerning their dairy. Not shipping to an Order 4 dairy, they did not have to worry about having a low base after the program ended. Leatherman ships to Guers Dairy, Tamaqua, a small, local plant. "We were concerned about our local dairy," he relates. "We planned to keep our production higher in the fall for the sake of the dairy."

"First thing we did on the program was to quit breeding heifers," Leatherman relates. Heifers were bred later to freshen after March. Leatherman also turned to poorer quality forages to feed the milking herd and saved his best forages for after the program ended. "We tried for higher butterfat and less production," he adds.

The most satisfying aspect about being on the program, according to Leatherman, was the culling. Starting out with 80 milking animals, he cut back to 55 in the milking string by culling at least one a week. "I was able to cull like I always wanted to," he states. "We didn't really cull cows that we did not want to, just a lot sooner."

"We also gave almost all our cows an extra month of dry period," he continues about his diversion practices. "We tried to avoid the 'fat cow syndrome'," he adds and says that health problems did not increase, with vet bills going down. Although his overhead remained the same, "Our expenses were reduced considerably," Leatherman comments.

lowering production is the excuse Leatherman uses for the three Jersey cows in his herd. He smiles when he tells of their purchase at the Walebe dispersal. According to Leatherman, he had plans to buy more Jerseys and reduce his Holstein numbers to cope with the diversion program. But a lack of available Jerseys and an immediate need to lower production made him implement other plans. "We found the Jerseys to be easy," he states and adds that his family really likes them.

Although the Leathermans have had one of the higher herd averages in Schuylkill County, the diversion program did cause a decrease in their rolling herd average. In 1984 Leatherman's herd ranked seventh with 18,085M, 700F. Because "days in milk" dropped from 85 days to 70 days, says Leatherman, his rolling herd average really came down. "But we improved the herd because we culled," he is quick to add. And, he states, average daily production stayed around 50 pounds on the reduced herd throughout the program.

The diversion program did not hurt the good cows in his herd either. The top cow for milking and protein production in Schuylkill County, Gay Ridge Spirit Stacey, with records to 30,836M, 986F, and 1,029P, is a member of this herd. However, soon after the diversion program began, "Spirit" was moved to the herd of another diversion participant to begin super ovulation.

Very pleased with his "Spirit" cow, Leatherman is cautiously optimistic about all the fertile embryos she has given him to date. She was flushed to Sweet Haven Tradition and Walkway Chief Mark. "Spirit's" index, at +1265M, +58F, +178$, also rated Leatherman a call from the sales committee of the Southfork Ranch Sale held recently.

He is currently milking "Spirit's" Triple Threat daughter and also has an Eng-Amer Ivanhoe Jerry yearling heifer out of her. Saying she was sort of a "victim of the program," Leatherman is grateful for the help of Andrew Stoltzfus, Morgantown, in her promotion.

"We are interested in merchandising good, sound cows," Leatherman comments about the future. "We've culled just about all that can be culled," he adds, and now they look forward to gradually increasing his herd back up to 80 cows. He is also ready to sell cows and bred heifers as he anticipates the end of the program.

As for the last 15 months, the absence of the constant pressure to produce was a great relief for this family. "I just thought there was a way to make it work," Leatherman reflects about the program. "The trade off was well worth it," he concludes.

Bedford dairymen tour Crawford County farms

MEADVILLE — Forty-four Bedford County dairy farmers and their families toured four Crawford County dairy farms last Saturday. First stop on the tour was Queens Manor Farm, Jamestown.

Ed Doeberiener and Sons, owners of Queens Manor, have a registered Holstein herd of 20 milking cows and more than 50 well-bred bulls and heifers. A unique animal housing program includes box stalls for the excellent milk cows, a calf-raising facility and a new gated loose housing barn arranged to group the heifers and bulls by age for labor savings and ease of handling.

The Doeberieners have had animals nominated for All-American recognition in both 1983 and 1984. They were recognized by the Crawford County DHIA for having the high herd in butterfat production last year. Their 1984 rolling herd average stood at 21,434 pounds milk, at 3.9 percent test, 812 lbs. of fat and 706 pounds protein.

The second stop on the tour was at the Raymond Anthony Farm, Meadville. Helen and Raymond Anthony manage an all-registered Holstein herd. The touring farmers were impressed with the new barn where the milk cows have been housed since January.

They have over 200 head of registered cattle, including heifers housed in a free-stall barn and young cattle grouped by age.

The Anthony's were also recognized for outstanding production by the Crawford County DHIA. Their 1984 rolling herd average for 63 cows was 20,930 lbs. milk, 786 lbs. fat and 680 lbs. protein.

Morrell Farms, operated by Ralph, Charles, Bob and Bill Morrell, Cochranton, was the third tour stop. This family operation includes 200 head of registered Holstein cattle and 500 acres of farmland.

The Morrell's 1984 DHIA rolling herd average for 92 cows was 18,281 lbs. milk, 647 lbs. fat, an 597 lbs. protein.

The fourth and last stop for the day was at Rynd Home Farms, Cochranton. Jack, Dennis, James and Dallas run this family farm with 230 registered Holsteins. They farm about 600 acres with the help of other members of the family. They raise most of their feed and use a total mixed ration feeding program.

Rynd Home had the highest protein production cow in Crawford County for the 1984 DHIA testing year. Loretta produced 33,304 lbs. of milk, with 1148 lbs. fat and 1081 lbs. protein. The Rynd Home DHIA average for 1984 on 120 cows was 15,612 lbs. milk, 600 lbs. fat, and 522 lbs. of protein per cow.

NMPF urges USDA to return milk to school lunches

WASHINGTON, D.C. — It was during the Carter administration, when the "dietary guidelines" anti-fat bandwagon came into vogue, that the United States Department of Agriculture removed the requirement that whole milk be included in the nation's school lunch program.

Since then, only low-fat milk is required to be included in the selections offered in the federally-subsized school lunch program, which involves millions of children each school day.

Now, the National Milk Producers Federation would like dairy farmers to help change that.

NMPF is urging parents of school age children and dairy farmers to write to USDA, urging the agency to again make whole milk a required alternative for children participating in the lunch program.

"USDA has not opened the regulations specifically to gather opinions," explains NMPF's director of communications Doni Dondero. "But, as long as it has been opened to comments, we can't let this opportunity go by."

USDA has proposed a reorganization of existing regulations on child nutrition programs, and the milk producers federation sees it as a "window of opportunity."

"If a person is a parent of a school age child, that qualifies them as personally interested and affected. You can explain that the lunch program is an example of good eating habits, or a model for children, and that you don't like whole milk not being offered. Whole milk should be offered as an example of a valuable food that children should consider selecting," Dondero adds.

Comments must be received by USDA, postmarked no later than April 15, and should be addressed to: Ms. Diane Berger, Section Head, Policy and Program Development Branch, Child Nutrition Division, Food and Nutrition Service, USDA, Alexandria, Virginia 22303.

Writers are asked to cite in their letters the following regulation reference: "FNS proposed rule on the National School Lunch Program, CFR 7, Part 210.10 d 1 milk."

Milk consumption has dropped in schools for a number of possible reasons, according to NMPF. One reason has been the initiation a few years ago of "offer vs. serve," which allows children to select only three of five nutritional items offered daily on the school lunch program.

If children do not prefer the taste of lowfat milk, and if their school district is not one which has voluntarily continued to offer whole milk as an alternative choice, they may not select milk at all as one of their choices.

And many children, says NMPF, are doing just that.

Because of a recent court decision, soft drinks and other "junk" foods are now available at many schools, even competing with milk in the lunch lineup. That ruling came in a U.S. Court of Appeals case for the District of Columbia Circuit, in National Soft Drink Association vs. Block, et al., which altered the "competitive food service regulations," originally designed to restrict the sale in schools of foods of minimal nutritional value.

In its own study, "The National Evaluation of School Nutrition Programs," USDA found that "Milk is a good source of calcium since it is difficult to obtain sufficient calcium from other sources."

That study further recognized milk as "an important nutritional component of all USDA school nutrition programs," and "its presence in the meal patterns probably accounts for some of the greater nutrient intakes associated with participation in the School Breakfast Program."

The study continues that "large proportions of the student population do not obtain their RDA (recommended daily allowance) for calcium." And, USDA's statistics state that over one-half of the student population consumes under 100 percent of their RDA for calcium, while over 30 percent of the student population consumed less than two-thirds the calcium RDA.

"So the provision of milk to students through the School Nutritional Programs is an important contribution to maintaining and improving the health of the nation's children, notes the USDA study.

Earlier studies by the Agriculture Department, done before the 1975 elimination of whole milk from the lunch program requirements, found that students consumed milk with school lunches consumed more milk both at school, and on a 24-hour basis, than did students eating any other type of lunch.

"The child should have the right to choose the type of milk he or she prefers," says NMPF, and not some misguided, self-proclaimed 'nutritionist,' who is willing to serve high fat foods like hot dogs and french fries, yet cut back on fats through serving skim milk, which reduces student milk consumption.

Dairy farmers are urged to write their comments to USDA–not later than April 15–to the above address, and to send copies, with any additional comments, to their congressional representatives.

NMPF also encourages dairymen to contact their friends, neighbors, and farm, school and community organizations for further public support and letter-writing assistance in having whole milk requirements reinstated in the federal school lunch program.

NMPF guidelines

How to write to USDA

WASHINGTON, D.C. — In urging dairy farmers to write to USDA in support of returning whole milk to the school lunch program, the National Milk Producers Federation has issued a collection of suggestions on letter writing to USDA, Congress and the White House.

While these guidelines are suggested along with background information on the recommendations for the whole milk, letter-writing campaign, NMPF stresses their value for writing on to officials any issue.

–Determine who is your best audience. Who is the best person, agency, or official to write to? In many cases, it is more than one. In commenting on regulations, for instance, the first priority is writing to the administering agency publishing the regulations. Follow-up letters to your Senators and Congressmen and to the White House can have a big impact, too. Legislation issues are best addressed to a Member of Congress. When it's time for the final Executive signature, however, then is the time to let the White House know what's on your mind.

–Be sure your name, address and phone number is clearly on the letter. Your letter is important because you are important. But if the letter does not clearly identify you, then it loses its impact.

–The first sentence is the most important: Assume that it is possible that only your first sentence will be read. Boil down your comments to a clear, concise statement and put it in your first sentence.

–Describe who you are: Make sure the government employee or Congressional aide knows about you and why they should care about your comments. Tell them where you farm, what you produce, what your economic interests are in the program you are commenting on, and tell them your connections to groups and organizations you are a member or leader of.

–Discuss your issues clearly: The more substantive information you can use to explain your position on the issue you are commenting on, the more effective your letter will be. However, write even if your letter is very simple, because your letter will count. USDA, for instance, likes to say that letters regarding regulations are not "votes," but they are. Every letter from a citizen counts toward influencing decisions.

–Be neat: Your letter doesn't have to be typewritten, but it must be easy to read. The appearance of your letter carries the message of who you are, so make your letter look smart.

–Get you comments in on time.

Agway dairy authority claims

Financial stress increasing for Northeast dairymen

BY WENDY WEHR

HERSHEY — Over 50 percent of dairy farmers are experiencing "severe financial stress." Net cash dairy farm income is expected to drop this year. The Reagan Administration's proposed farm policy bodes "financial disaster for dairymen."

With such alarming observations before us, what good can 1985 and beyond hold for Northeast dairymen?

Dr. Lewellyn S. Mix, director of farm management research and development for Agway, Inc., Syracuse, N.Y., minces no words in his predictions for the Northeast dairy industry. Citing solid statistics to back up his observations about the ailing dairy economy, Mix addressed members of Lehigh Valley Farmers last week at their annual meetings.

"USDA survey data as of January 1, 1985, indicated that over 50 percent of U.S. dairy farmers were experiencing some degree of financial stress, with the likelihood that this figure will reach 75 percent by January 1, 1986," announces Mix. Dairymen with debt-asset ratios in excess of 40 percent fall under the "serious financial stress" description, he says.

Mix calls the current financial situation of thousands of dairymen "alarming and cause for some very serious planning and soul searching by government, dairy cooperatives and producers alike."

Taking into account a projected two percent increase in milk production this year, CCC purchases above targeted levels in 1985, and an increase in the cost of milk production, Mix also predicts a drop in net cash dairy farm income of from three to six percent in 1985.

"The increase (in milk production) will come from one percent more cows and a heavier level of grain feeding due to the current 20 percent lower grain prices than a year ago," says Mix. "Most of the production increase will come in the second half of the year as about 80,000 more heifers will calve in this period than in the same period last year."

Roughly 7000 of the extra heifers are in Pennsylvania, adds Mix.

With 1985 CCC purchases above targeted levels, the support price will consequently drop to $12.10 per hundredweight on April 1 and to $11.60 on July 1.

"For 1985 as a whole," says Dr. Mix, "blend prices to dairymen, taking into account the discontinued 50-cent assessment, could average $12.50 cwt. in Federal Order #2 versus $12.53 last year. The weighted average price after assessment in Federal Order #4 could average $13.15 for 1985 versus $13.17 last year."

And with the cost of milk production expected to rise about three percent in 1985, with most inputs up except purchased feed and petro fuels, net cash dairy farm income is expected to drop three to six percent this year.

Reagan's "financial disaster"

To add insult to injury, the proposed Reagan Administration plan would bring the support price down to $10.60 by January 1, 1987. Then a target price-deficiency payment plan would go into effect October 1, 1987.

Under the plan, according to the National Milk Producers Federation, the target price beginning October 1, 1987 would be $9.21 and by October 1, 1989 it would be $8.10.

By 1990, the average market price for the preceding three years would be $9.20 and the target price, therefore, would be set at $6.90. That means, says Mix, that the market price would have to fall below any of these levels before any deficiency payment would be given. In addition, there would be a $10,000 cap on all deficiency payments made to a farmer.

"This program is really no program at all," declares Mix. "The Administration's proposed plan would mean financial disaster for dairymen and the economies of thousands of rural communities.

"Dairymen and their cooperatives cannot afford to allow this plan to become law," he warns.

A better plan

Admitting that Congress will probably not accept the Reagan plan, Mix outlines the "better plan" that nineteen Northeastern farm organizations and dairy cooperatives have agreed upon. Billed "The 1985 Farm Bill Committee Consensus," the recommended four point plan includes:

- Continuation of the dairy support program using the new NMPF Dairy Specific Formula that reflects cost of production and productivity.
- Use of a supply-demand adjuster to move the support price up or down according to the level of CCC purchases.
- Continuation of the Federal Order system with no drastic changes.
- Extension of the National Dairy Board promotion program by producer referendum this summer.

Mix says it was unfortunate that a fifth point — recommending a stand-by diversion program — could not be agreed upon. But he does commend the broad-based group for developing a unified Northeast position. "It's difficult to get representatives of 19 farm organizations in a room to agree on anything," quips Mix, let alone give unanimous approval of four major policy issues.

The four-point program would keep CCC purchase costs at a half billion dollars or less, prices to producers would be appreciably higher than under the Reagan plan, and milk shortages and excessive consumer prices would be avoided. "Efficient producers could make a fair return on their investment and the whole rural economy would be more stable," adds Mix.

"Staying alive in '85"

While dairy farm policy is being debated, Mix offers these survival tactics for dairy farmers in 1985:

- Keep debt service and debt loads per cow at a maximum of $1500 per cow or less.
- Obtain high output per cow (15,000 pounds of 3.5 milk) and high output per worker (500,000 pounds or better).
- Avoid major capital expenditures unless they have a very short payback period.
- Practice diligent annual budgeting and cash flow management with a good set of records.

Similarly, the co-ops must improve their marketing efforts, engage in brand advertising, and keep down expenses. "You need your cooperative as never before to fight the legislative and marketing challenges for you," says Mix.

"Let's get a coalition here on the upcoming farm bill," he concludes. "America cannot have a sound economy when half or more of all farmers are in severe financial distress."

Dr. Lew Mix, director of farm management for Agway, Inc., talks with Alpheus Ruth, president of Lehigh Valley Farmers. Mix was featured speaker at the Lehigh Valley annual meetings last week.

Lehigh Valley farmers fetes quality producers

HERSHEY — More than 80 farmers who ship milk to Lehigh Valley Farmers were honored for producing high quality milk at the Lansdale-based cooperative's annual meeting last week. Identical meetings were held in two locations, Wilkes Barre and Hershey, to accommodate members in both the north and south of Pennsylvania.

The Lehigh Valley farmer-members produced 894 million pounds of milk, valued at more than $122 million during 1984.

At the annual meeting, Lehigh officials reported a record year for the cooperative. A net margin of $3,849,000 — a 74 percent increase over the previous year — will be distributed to members in the form of equity certificates and a cash dividend of $591,000. Nearly a million dollars has been paid previously in premiums and quality bonuses.

"Our financial picture is bright," said Alpheus L. Ruth, president of Lehigh Valley Farmers. "Our 'Look here what we have' theme is appropriate to the organization's strength and its tangible benefits. It also relates to our guaranteed market at Atlantic Processing."

Atlantic Processing, Inc. is a federation of several dairy cooperatives, with a 15-year contract to market all milk produced by members of Lehigh Valley. Lehigh currently accounts for 65 percent of API's receipts of raw milk.

Ruth also congratulated current Lehigh shippers for their continued support of branded advertising programs, which the cooperative believes to be more effective than the programs of the National Dairy Board.

Also reporting to the membership was vice-president Roy Hetrick and treasurer Robert Gehman.

General manager William Stout reviewed the premium and bonus programs. Of the $953 thousand paid out during 1984, $756 thousand went to the members for producing high quality milk with low bacteria and somatic cell counts.

"It's these kinds of incentives that we count on to attract new members to our cooperative," said Stout. He described various strategies that are being used as a Lehigh sales tool, including another bonus of 30 cents per hundredweight to be paid this fall for all production in excess of last year's volume of milk.

The 80 dairy farmers who were honored for quality milk received plaques for maintaining a bacterial standard plate count of less than 8,000 for an entire year.

Additional awards were presented to 10 dairy farmers whose herds had unusually low somatic cell counts. Both groups received cash bonuses during the year for producing superior quality milk.

Farm-city exchange productive for farmers, businessmen

BY JOYCE BUPP
Staff Correspondent

YORK — Greg Keller slept well last Thursday night. Keller, a vice-president of the Drovers and Mechanics Bank, was one of three York area businessmen who took part in a National Ag Day farm-city exchange.

Also participating were Walter Jeffers, with the agriculture division of the Glatfelter insurance agency, and James Vallosio, General Telephone's construction supervisor of network facilities.

Host for Keller was Martin Grey, York R5, manager of Sinking Springs dairy farm. Jeffers spent his day with Carolyn and Jerry Rutter at their Dover hog, beef and grain production operation and Vallosio's workday was with Bob Smyser, a partner in Smyser's Richlawn dairy farm. York Chamer of Commerce and the Agricultural Extension Service coordinated the exchange.

At a mutually convenient time in the next few weeks, the farm hosts will have the tables turned, as they spend a workday in the businesses of their guest.

"It was even more than I experienced, "an enthused Keller said after a day that began with hauling out a load of manure and ended with his lending a hand milking the farm's dairy herd.

The banker admitted that he'd been "psyched up" about the experience, even waking up the night before and experiencing difficulties getting back to sleep because of his anticipation for the workday on the farm.

"I knew it was a lot of hard work, but I wasn't aware of all the steps. These farmers seem to put a 40-hour week into one day alone. In fact, they had put in a half day already before I even got there," he says of the Sinking Springs staff, who begin milking chores about 4 a.m.

Between interruptions by reporters and TV cameramen who stopped by to film a news spot of the exchange, Keller helped sort, corral and load young stock for moving to an adjoining farm, got acquainted with the mechanics and feel of disking and plowing equipment, climbed to the top of the silo, fed cattle and helped mend fences "in the north forty."

"It was a super day - and the home-cooked meal was marvelous," Keller related. His purchase of a new pair of work shoes for the farm chores day got a thorough "breaking in," just in time for use on the 20-acre farm he and his wife recently purchased near Freysville.

Host Martin Frey was equally enthusiastic about his working guest.

"I was impressed with his willingness to get in there and get his hands dirty; Greg really wanted to get into doing everything," noted Grey, who along with his farm management duties is the farm director for WSBA-radio.

Meanwhile, on the Smyser dairy farm on East Berlin Road, General Telephone's James Vallosio was getting a hands-on overview of this 75-cow milking herd, operated in partnership by host Bob Smyser, his brother Rodney and their father, Richard.

An undisputed high point of Vallosio's day was the delivery of twin calves by one of the freshening dairy herd members.

"I gave them their first bottles," said the phone facilities supervisor, with a trace of satisfaction in his voice at his part in the new life of the bull and heifer calves.

Originally from western Pennsylvania, Vallosio remembered spending time on farms as a youngster, and went prepared to hold up his end of the exchange bargain with a day of work.

"I came home tired," he related that evening. Orientation of the Smyser farm included a look at the livestock of various ages, contour farming techniques on the crop ground, and a demonstration of the farm's ram-pump manure handling system, a method he says was new to him.

Observing a demonstration of on-farm herd insemination, stacking a load of hay for the cattle, assisting with feeding chores and washing cows for the evening milking were all part of his chores for the day.

Most eye-opening to the telephone company supervisor was the sophistication of the farm's dairy production records, including feeding weights, and the testing of milk weights and butterfat levels.

Host Smyser termed the day "real good," and expressed appreciation for how their working guest had pitched in to help with the day's routine.

"I had him do just as much as possible," he chuckled of the volunteer, who was "really interested."

For agriculture insurance specialist Walter Jeffers, the day on the Rutter farm went "very well."

"First thing they did was to issue me my official 'Master-Mix' farm

BY JAMES H. EVERHART

HARRISBURG — The state Capitol probably hasn't seen anything like it. At least not since last year.

Five hundred Pennsylvania farmers converged on the center of state legislative authority to talk about issues of importance to the state's farmers.

From one end of the Capitol to the other. From first floor to fifth. From caucus room to office, farmers were buttonholing their elected representatives.

And they wanted to know about two things – land and bottles.

The event was the Pennsylvania Farmers' Association's annual Harrisburg tour, in which the organization turns out the faithful to lobby for the group's legislative agenda . . . and to demonstrate the association's political clout to the powers-that-be.

At the top of PFA's list of legislative priorities is a proposal to use $37.5 million from the state's share of the realty transfer tax to buy development rights for prime agricultural land.

"Today there is a value to having fruits and vegetables produced locally, close to the markets where consumers can purchase them," PFA President Keith Eckel told the 500 amateur lobbyists at a dinner following the "tour."

Relating his own experience with "green-wrap" tomatoes, Eckel noted that increased energy costs made his industry prosperous just when it seemed that California products were going to capture the market.

"We should be willing to make an annual investment of five to ten dollars per citizen to assure us a sound, locally produced food supply," Eckel said. "In my opinion, that is not a cost today, but an investment in every Pennsylvanian's future.

The group also turned on the heat on the chairman of the Senate committee where container deposit legislation has been on the mired. At least six groups or about 30 voters visited the Senator's office, in an unsuccessful attempt to meet with the Republican legislator.

PFA wants the committee to take action on the bill, which would require a five-cent minimum deposit on all beverage containers sold or distributed in the state.

In addition to saving state and local governments $30 million for litter removal, the measure would also bring about "savings to farmers in time in picking up unwanted trash and fixing damaged equipment and in the needless deaths of our farm animals," Eckel said.

Avian flu task force to shut down Monday

HARRISBURG — Pennsylvania's two-year effort to eradicate avian influenza from the state's poultry flocks concludes April 1, according to state Agriculture Secretary Penrose Hallowell, with the removal of all federal task force officials.

"With the successful completion of a six-month post-quarantine surveillance required by federal officials, Pennsylvania poultry operations are now free of the disease which nearly crippled the state's $450 million poultry industry in late 1983 and 1984," said Hallowell.

The Department's Bureau of Animal Industry, University of Pennsylvania's School of Veterinary Medicine, The Pennsylvania State University, Delaware Valley College of Science and Agriculture, and the Pennsylvania poultry industry are planning a cooperative disease reporting system in an ongoing surveillance effort to prevent future problems with avian influenza.

The program includes an egg and blood collection system for diagnosis of contagious diseases, as well as a communications framework for reporting outbreaks.

"These measures will help ensure the health, growth and vitality of one of Pennsylvania's largest agricultural and agribusiness sectors," said Hallowell. A surveillance program entitled Poultry Watch was instituted by the joint state-federal-industry Avian Influenza Task Force during the latter stages of the outbreak to monitor possible disease spread among the poultry farms in the quarantine area.

"Freeing the state of this dreaded disease required the expertise of specialists from the United States and Pennsylvania Departments of Agriculture and the poultry industry," he added. The lethal influenza virus was last detected in March 1984.

The six-month surveillance period began October 4, 1984, following the withdrawal of a state-federal quarantine which at one time encompassed a 5500-square mile, nine-county area of southeastern Pennsylvania.

Specialists theorize that avian influenza was introduced to Pennsylvania by migratory waterfowl. Initial signs of a "mild" variety of the disease became evident in several Lancaster County poultry flocks in April 1983.

Following an emergency declaration and the imposition of a state-federal quarantine in November 1983, all farms having any evidence of the virulent H5N2 strain of avian influenza were depopulated, cleaned, disinfected and held vacant for 30 days to prevent reintroduction of the disease.

More than 15.7 million chickens, turkeys and specialty fowl from 416 flocks were destroyed to assure eradication of this highly pathogenic disease. The federal government expended more than $50 million in Pennsylvania for bird disposal and indemnity costs, while the commonwealth provided more than $2.2 million to reimburse farmers for the costs associated with the outbreak.

sponsors propose earmarking one-half of the state's share of realty transfer tax revenues–about $50 million–for the purchase of development rights.

The funds would be distributed to counties every six months using two payment schedules. One-half of the money would be allocated in proportion to the percentage of realty transfer tax paid by the county during the preceeding year. This provision would exclude Philadelphia County, and no county's share could exceed 3½ percent of the total money available.

The other half of the money would be distributed to counties on a matching-funds basis. Counties that account for more than two percent of the state's agricultural production (by dollar volume) would contribute one dollar for every eight dollars allocated by the state. Counties falling below this two-percent figure would be required to contribute on a one-to-four ratio.

The program would be administered by a 16-member Agricultural Conservation Board, which would be responsible for certifying all county cost-sharing arrangements.

Participation would be voluntary for both the farmer and the county, and per-acre land values would undoubtedly have to be assessed on an individual basis, Wenger said.

"The counties will determine what they are going to be able to pay," Wenger continued, "and if it's beyond their ability we would probably not be able to preserve every acre of land."

When questioned about where the money will come from, with no new sources of revenues being indicated, Sen. Stapleton responded, "I think that our Department of Agriculture budget hasn't been funded as well as it should be, and I think we can find the $50 million in the General Appropriations fund."

"It's a matter of priority," added Wenger. "If we were to lose agriculture in Pennsylvania in the future...then we would lose the agribusiness that goes with it, and it would cost the people much more than would be involved on an annual basis here.

"We're saying that if preservation of farmland is beneficial to all of us, then all should make an economic contribution to assuring the continuation of those farms," Wenger concluded.

Graybills say dairy diversion program worked for them

BY SALLY BAIR
Staff Correspondent

HERSHEY – Frank Graybill considers himself a businessman first and a farmer second. The Hershey area farmer says simply, "A farmer has to be a businessman, searching out any opportunity."

In his businessman role, Graybill and his wife, Virginia, put their very carefully kept records into a computer and concluded that it would be financially advantageous for them to sign up for the dairy diversion program. Now that the program is concluding, they feel strongly that it was the right decision for them.

Before making the final decision, they consulted their accountant and asked Newton J. Bair, retired Lebanon County agent, to work with them.

Through careful deliberation, they decided to sign up for a 23 percent reduction. As a result, during the 18-month period, they reduced their milking herd size from 95 to 58, and their herd average from 21,000 pounds to 17,517 pounds. The result was a year that Virginia said was 'relaxing."

"We are very happy that we went on it," she says. "It has been beneficial financially." Graybill adds, "Our accountant says it was a good move. He wouldn't do anything differently." Milking time was reduced from 1 hour and 45 minutes to a little over an hour. That allowed a lot more time with their children, Laura, 6, and Dan, 3, and also eliminated the necessity of hiring someone full time.

They were able to do some remodeling in the house because Frank had more time. Virginia says, "Frank is very aggressive and the projects in the house gave him the opportunity to stay busy."

Of course the sign up meant that some heavy culling had to take place. Virginia says they culled from the bottom, and that in itself made milking easier. She pointed out that they sold some problem cows that they had kept for sentimental reasons. They also sold some they wouldn't have ordinarily, but they knew they had no choice. They exported a few animals, but most went for slaughter, and they had to send the sales slips within five days of sale, certifying that they, indeed, were intended for slaughter and not for resale. Even the export animals had to be properly certified.

Graybill says they did not feed the cows for as many pounds of milk, which helped cut production, and they cut back on grain, feeding more roughage. He said they also were not as concerned as usual with the quality of hay they fed. Some cows were dried off earlier to help meet cutback quotas.

Graybill also cut back on the amount of ' was farming, to about 200 .es. He made the cutback primarily because he finds he can buy as cheap as he can grow some crops.

Always good record keepers, Graybills found their records even more valuable during the 15 months of the diversion program. They calculated every month to be sure they were within the percentage points they had signed up for. Virginia noted that dairymen could vary three percentage points each direction, and the reduction was averaged over the entire period. If the calulations were off, quarterly payments were not made by the program. Furthermore, if dairymen went over the agreed upon reduction, they had to pay back the diversion payments, with interest at the program's conclusion - a steep penalty for failing to live up to the agreement.

Graybill feels more people should have signed up for the program, and has had people tell him now they wish they had. However, he said when the initial informational meetings were held, it seemed like a "lot of red tape from the government." Virginia added, "It looked like a lot of hassle." They agreed that people from this conservative area of Pennsylvania just don't like to get involved with government programs.

Graybill makes it clear that he doesn't feel the checks he received were government handouts. They were paid for, he points out, by fellow dairymen who chose not to participate in the program. Dairymen had a choice - to participate or to pay, with the opportunity being offered equally.

All in all, he said he feels the diversion program was not as successful as some people are saying. It did cut commodity stocks, and production is down, but Graybill points out, "Dairymen were down in production but that was due to the quality and quantity of feed from the poor weather in 1983." In fact, the high price of feed was one factor which led them to participate. He feels the reduction cannot all be attributed to the diversion program.

He also acknowledges that he now will need to increase his herd size, and says frankly when asked about what will happen in the future, "There will be a lot of milk on the market."

He said most dairymen who participated will find themselves in the same situation he is in. He now must increase production because he still has mortgage payments. "We have to take care of our own operation. We never said we would stay down. It was a drastic thing to cut back." He says that as heifers freshen they will probably need the services of their part-time hired man, Ken Risser of Rheems, even more.

Graybill feels the future of the dairy industry is "uncertain." He says honestly that it will be the "efficient ones that will survive." The failures in the news are sad because they are affecting people's lives and livelihood, but he says, "We don't need more debts, what we need are better markets. If we create better markets, it won't put the burden on the taxpayer."

Money taken for promotion is well worth the cost, he says Virginia points out that milk consumption is up, and Frank says, "I am encouraged by that We are creating a real market for it." Virginia notes that the outcry on osteoporosis has already had an effect, and relatives have told her they are drinking more milk because of what they have learned.

Dairy farming is a way of life for the Graybills, and one they clearly enjoy. But Graybill recalls that farming is the last thing he wanted to do when he was in high school. He went to college for a year and worked as a technician for Atlantic Breeders Cooperative for two years before changing his mind. What got him interested was an 11-week period of running his father's farm with a 15-year old brother while his parents traveled to Japan. He says, "The challenge of it got me going."

He and Virginia took over the farm 10 years ago, and slowly built the herd form 35 to 95. They rented the farm before actually purchasing it two years ago. They have upgraded the facilities, changing from pipeline to milking parlor, and have made other refinements, adding to its efficiency.

But record keeping is an integral part of their business. Virginia keeps most of the financial records and Frank keeps individual cow records, but they both are completely knowledgeable about the farm. Virginia helps milk and clean the parlor in addition to doing calf registrations.

Frank says earnestly, "It is a business. If it isn't profitable, we can't do it." To Frank, keeping records is "intriguing," as well as a necessary part of running a business. Their records are computerized, but they don't believe they need to own a computer themselves.

Graybill's credit their faith, with Frank explaining, "Putting the Lord first has made a difference. Worrying doesn't help. The Lord takes care of the sparrow and He will take care of us."

Graybill also believes strongly in using God-given resources in making decisions and carrying out work on the farm.

To the Graybills, participating in the dairy diversion program was a financially sound move. It worked for them.

Frank and Virginia Graybill keep accurate records of their farming operation and are able to base their decisions on financial considerations. Here they go over expenditures for the month.

Frank works on the records in the office they had built onto their barn. From his desk he has an overview of the dairy herd.

This calf, only hours old, represents the future of their dairy operation for Frank and Virginia Graybill. Farming on the Dauphin-Lebanon County line near Hershey, the Graybills participated in the dairy diversion program, a move they believe was beneficial to them.

State Bred Heifer Sale average jumps $1,000

BY WENDY WEHR

HARRISBURG — Consignments averaged a healthy $1772 at Thursday night's State Bred Heifer Sale at the Farm Show Complex. The sale average was up over a thousand dollars from last year's bidding.

A Glendell heifer topped the sale with a $4,100 bid from Larry Wenger, Lancaster. Frisky Acres Glendell Erma was consigned by George Lamborn, Nottingham.

Out of Frisky Acres Elevation Aster, Erma was bred September 17 to Pen-Col Dictator-ET. The Dictator bull is a Jetson son out of Pen-Col Wayne Deena.

Aster, the dam of the April 1983 heifer, has a top record of 27,582 pounds milk and 1081 pounds fat and an index of +341M and +$56. Aster is scored VG-87.

Running a close second to the Erma heifer, Clayholm Ivanhoe Mandona brought $4000 from buyer Raymond Anthony, of Meadville. Consigned by Ray Claypoole, Worthington, Mandona is a Bell daughter out of the high-test dam, Clayholm Valiant Mandy.

Frisky Acres Glendell Erma topped the State Bred Heifer Sale on Thursday night. Larry Wenger, Lancaster, purchased the Glendell daughter for $4,100.

Hawked as the "highest testing cow in the breed," Mandy is topping 5.0 percent fat and is milking 85 pounds a day. She stands at a VG-87.

A January 1983 heifer, Mandona is bred to Harmony-Corners Simon-Twin.

Two other consignments surpassed the $3000 mark. John F. Stoltzfus, Lewisburg, paid $3,600 for Marcove Jade Judene, a March heifer bred to Mars-Tony.

By Duke Jade Starlite of R-K-O, Judene is out of Marcove Elevation Judy. Judy is a VG-87 dam with a record at 6 years and 2 months of 24,960 pounds milk and 1084 pounds fat. Judene was consigned by Marcove Farm, Martinsburg.

The fourth high selling consignment was Burket Falls Tradition Delene, a February heifer offered by Burket Falls Farm, East Freedom.

Delene was bred in July to Burket Falls Polled Ed-Red-ET, which was named grand champion bull at last year's Spring International Red and White Show.

Out of Burket Falls Rorae Della-ET, Delene is a Tradition daughter. She was purchased by Blackcrest Farms, Altoona, for $3,100.

With 67 head selling, the State Bred Heifer Sale topped out at an unofficial average of $1772. Last year's bidding averaged $1,626 on 84 head.

The state sale was managed by the Pennsylvania Holstein Association.

Look for coverage of the State Calf Sale in next week's Lancaster Farming.

Second high selling consignment was Clayholm Ivanhoe Mandona, a January 1983 heifer purchased by Raymond Anthony, Meadville.

John F. Stoltzfus, Lewisburg, bought the third-high selling heifer for $3,600 at the State Bred Heifer Sale on Thursday night. Marcove Jade Judene was consigned by Marcove Farm, Martinsburg.

The fourth high selling heifer was Burket Falls Traditional Delene, a Tradition daughter bred to Burket Falls Polled Ed-Red.

She's projected to make 26,000 pounds on this lactation.

Standing a very close second to the red cow, Singing Brook Pete Audie captured the reserve senior and reserve grand championships. Judge Robert Brown, of Paris, Ontario, admired the two five-year-olds as he pulled them to the top of their class and described them as a "real fine pair of dairy cows."

From the Singing Brook herd of Obie Snider, Imler, Audie was also named the best female bred and owned of the show. A Pete daughter out of Singing Brook Astro Audie, she captured the reserve grand championship at the 1984 spring show, too.

Scored Ex-93, Audie was named reserve all-Pennsylvania last year and all-Pennsylvania as a two-year-old. At three years and four months Audie had 26,093 pounds milk and 1031 pounds fat.

Winning the grand championship of the state spring show for the third consecutive year, the Doeberieners, of Queens Manor, also garnered enough points to share the premier exhibitor honors with Gor-Wood-D Acres.

Other Queens Manor wins included the champion bull, Leadfield Priority - ET, a Leadfield Columbus son out of Leadfield Telstar Linda - E.T. Linda was grand champion of the state spring show in 1983.

Gordon Wood, of Gor-Wood-D Acres, was pleased to win the premier breeder banner and tie with Queens Manor for the premier exhibitor honors.

Following the show, Wood remarked that they have twice come within two points of earning the premier breeder title at state shows. Although they didn't want to be too confident before the show, Wood said "we thought we had a good shot" at winning the premier honors this year.

The junior championships were captured by Kerchenhill Holsteins, Kutztown, and Mark Campbell, of Ford City.

Junior champion was the first-place junior yearling heifer, Kerchenhill Field Sabrina. A Mars-Tony daughter out of Indianvale Star Sabrina, she was bred and owned by Kerchenhill.

The top heifer calf, Campbell-Run Cabilaro Mith, earned the reserve junior champion honors. Mark Campbell showed the Queens Manor Cabilaro daughter to the championship.

In youth division competition, Tom McCauley, Elizabethtown, showed the senior and grand champion, Queen Star Sexy. A four-year-old, Sexy is an Ocean View Sexation daughter out of Muroc FV Star Dede.

Another Ocean View Sexation daughter earned the reserve senior and reserve grand championships in the youth division. The homebred three-year-old, Sunnybend Sexy Glitter B Star, was also named the best bred and owned of the youth entries. Glitter comes from the herd of Bridgette Boyer, York.

The junior champion in the youth competition was shown by Justin Doeberiener, while Julie Custead, of Meadville, exhibited the reserve junior champion.

The top three placings in both the open and youth divisions of the Holstein state spring show follow.

Walker says Congress "playing politics"

BY JAMES H. EVERHART

LANCASTER — Admitting that some of the Reagan Administration's recent statements about the farm situation have been "very insensitive," U.S. Rep. Robert Walker said the actions of the Congress have been worse.

"We've been playing a lot of political games in the Congress," Walker told the 300 people who attended the annual meeting of the Lancaster Farmers' Association last weekend.

And the recent emergency farm credit legislation is an excellent example of the Congressional "sideshow" staged for political purposes and not for the benefit of farmers.

One of the credit bills proposed, he said, would have been directed at farmers whose outstanding loans amount to more than 70 percent of their farm's value.

"There is no government program that can help someone leveraged to 70 percent," Walker said. "That would be money poured down a rathole."

Another proposal, he added, would have put more than $9 billion in federal revenue at risk, and would have been perceived as a "massive budget-buster" by credit markets.

Interest rates, he added, probably would have risen at least one-half percent as a result of that perception, causing an impact "far more negative than any help that could have been brought by any of the bills."

That proposal, he said, "could have put the whole farm economy at risk because it would have caused interest rates to ratchet up."

If the Congress had been truly interested in helping farmers, he said, it would have directed its attention to the $650 million the Administration had already allocated to helping farmers.

Those who wanted to help farmers, he said, should have proposed programs within the scope of the allocation the Administration had already set aside.

Turning his attention to the 1985 Farm Bill, Walker said he believed the Administration's proposal would undergo a number of changes before emerging from the Congress.

"If I had to guess, I'd say we will probably come off Capitol Hill with a Farm Bill somewhere between the Farm Bureau proposal and the one advanced by Senator Helms," he said.

The proposal, he added, will have the "market orientation" both Reagan and the Farm Bureau have requested. But, he added, he's not sure the bill will bring about the fundamental changes that all parties have requested.

"I had hoped that we would be able to come up with a real Farm Bill this time," said Walker. "But I become more and more pessimistic all the time."

U.S. Rep. Robert Walker responds to a question following his speech to the Lancaster County Farmers Association annual banquet last weekend.

Blair County Holstein Club meets

BY BETSY STITT
Staff Correspondent

WILLIAMSBURG — The Blair County Holstein Club recently met for their annual banquet. Doug Hershey, the former director of membership for the state Holstein Association, served as master of ceremonies. Crystal Pheasant, the Blair County Dairy Princess, spoke of her recent activities and about milk's products.

Dean Stern, a Holstein director, spoke on behalf of the Dairy Promotion Committee. They have planned a milk carton sculpture contest, a T-shirt promotion, and a county Milk Day.

Tom Kelly gave the state director and convention reports. At the convention new by-laws were adopted by the association; control is now in the hands of the board of directors. Kelly also reported that Blair County's membership currently stands at 147 members. The state has set a goal of 172 for the county.

Ken Raney, youth and membership director for the PHA, explained upcoming activities for adults and juniors and encouraged everyone to become involved.

Youth awards were presented by Bob Hetrick, county agent, and Bill Black. Plaques and certificates were given to the owner of the top cow in each age group for milk and fat production.

Susanne Kelly, of Tyrone, owns the top 2-yr.-old in both milk and fat production. She produced 21,656 pounds of milk and 844 pounds of fat. Doug Smith, of Martinsburg, had the second place cow in milk and Becky Greenleaf, also of Martinsburg, had second place cow in fat.

Susanne Kelly also had the first place 3-yr.-old in milk. She produced 24,650 pounds milk. Her brother Brian Kelly and the first place 3-yr.-old in fat production with 744 pounds. Susanne and Brian also had the second place cows for milk and fat.

In the 4-yr.-old competition Bobbi Jo Hoover of Martinsburg had the top cow in both milk and fat production. She produced 24,541 pounds of milk and 871 pounds of fat. Brian Kelly's cow was second in both milk and fat.

Bobbi Jo's brother, Ken Hoover, had the aged cow that produced 26,659 pounds of milk and 982 of fat. Those records put her in first place. Karen Diebold, of Tyrone, had the second place cow in milk and Brian Kelly owns the second place cow in fat.

Brian Kelly was also recognized as the State Distinguished Junior Holstein Member, at the recent convention held in Philadelphia. He currently owns 20 registered Holsteins. Kelly is a student at Virginia Tech, majoring in dairy science.

This is the second year that Blair County has had the state's distinguished junior member. John Burket, as last year's distinguished member, went on to receive the national title.

Stan Muschweck, a representative of the Pennsylvania Dairy Promotion Board, was the main speaker of the evening. He reported on their activities and the advertisements they have developed Muschweck said that a recent survey indicated that taste will sell milk better than nutritional value.

New members were also elected to the board of directors. They are: Gary Bechtel of Curryville, Dennis Smith of Martinsburg, and John Black of Tyrone.

Pa. Dairymen's Assoc. elects officers

CAMP HILL — Officers were elected at a recent board meeting of the Pennsylvania Dairymen's Association.

The new slate of officers includes: E. Wayne Beshore, York County, president; Robert Pepple, Chester County, vice-president; John Blyholder, New Cumberland, secretary-treasurer; Tom Williams, Dauphin County, assistant secretary; Dr. Lawrence Specht, Penn State advisor.

New board members elected at the annual meeting in January were: Clyde Robison, Washington County; Robert Smith, Bedford County; and David Burket, Blair County.

Berks dairyman Forrest Stricker takes...

The low-fiber road to high-quality feed

BY JACK HUBLEY

WERNERSVILLE — The son of Kathryn and Carl Stricker levels a case-hardened stare.

"When I was growing up we had to work hard, and I didn't like farming," he says.

So in 1972 young Forrest Stricker fled the family's Berks County dairy farm and hit the books at Penn State's Berks Campus. Emerging two years later with an associate degree in electrical engineering, Forrest took an office job with DuPont. But too much canned music and carpet underfoot was destined to give this farm boy a severe case of cabin fever.

"By that time I realized that farming wasn't so bad after all," says Stricker, who returned home in 1978 and worked for his father for one year before the two formed a partnership. The agreement was finally dissolved in 1982 when Forrest assumed ownership of the cattle and machinery.

"I really started cold, too," says Stricker. "I couldn't have told you what to feed a cow." But it didn't take the young dairyman long to warm up to his new occupation.

"Back in 1978 our rolling herd average was around 10,000 pounds," recalls Stricker, "and our first year on DHIA, (1980) our record was 14,600 and 569 pounds of fat."

"We're seeing mature cows peak at 120 pounds and over, three-year-olds at 100 pounds and two-year-olds at 70 to 80 pounds."

These days, the herd tops the 20,000-pound mark, with over 700 pounds of fat. In January of this year, milking a partly registered herd of 46 cows, Stricker's herd averaged 71 pounds of milk with a 3.8 butterfat test. His top cow had 141 pounds of milk, and six cows topped 100 pounds. In February, seven cows had topped the 100-pound mark, with two producing 135 pounds. And no cow produced less than 3.0 percent butterfat.

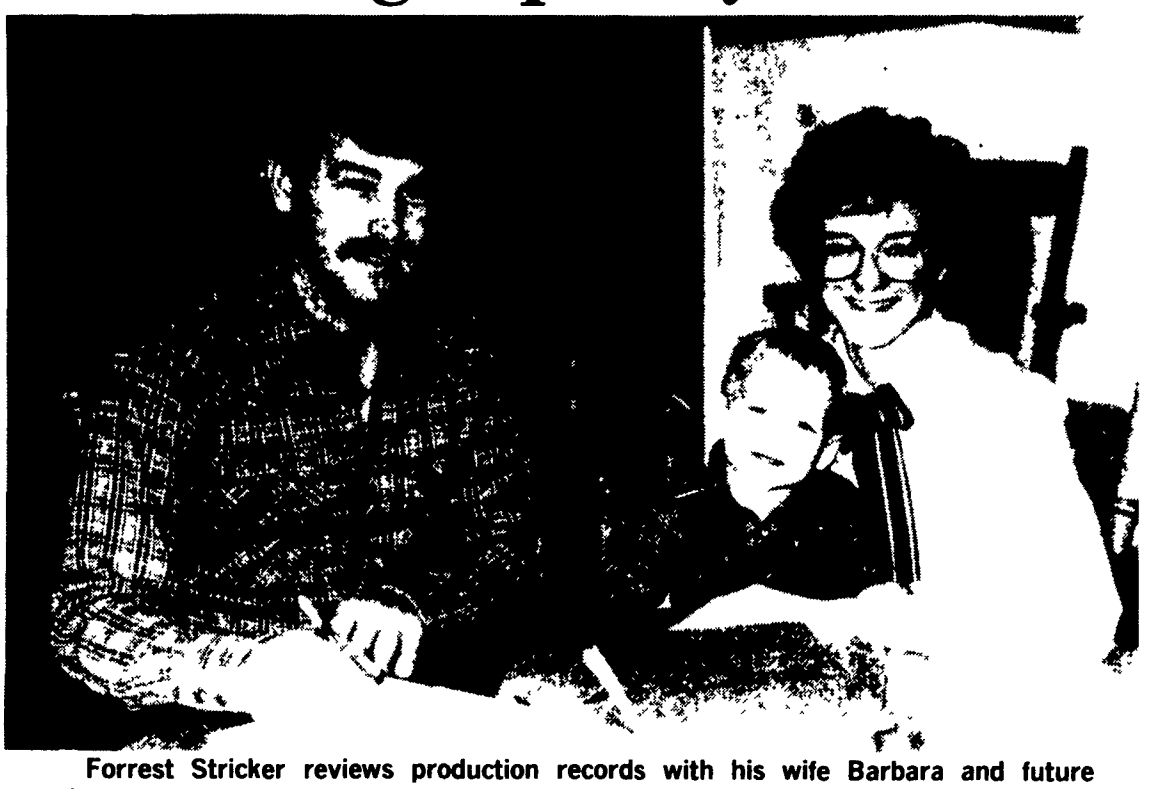
Though future plans include developing a totally registered herd, Forrest's number-one priority is milk production. How does the dairyman go about turning a profit in the milk business these days? "By knowing what to grow in the field and how to apply it to my cows," says Stricker.

"Quality alfalfa is the keystone of our operation," he says, emphasizing the importance of high quality, medium-moisture haylage in his feeding regimen. Stricker's hay is cut at the 30-percent ADF (acid detergent fiber) level and stored at 40 to 45 percent moisture, with a protein content of about 22 percent.

"Fiber is really a better measure of alfalfa quality than protein."

Protein may be important, but to Stricker, the magic number is 30 percent ADF. "Fiber is really a better measure of alfalfa quality than protein," he says.

What's so important about 30 percent ADF? "I feel we can get optimum levels of forage into our high producers, which means we can cut back on grain, the more expensive part of the ration," he points out.



Forrest Stricker reviews production records with his wife Barbara and future dairyman Gregory.

And the dairyman goes all out to maintain that uniform ADF level. "As alfalfa matures," he explains, " everyday its fiber level increases a point or two. So I cut all 60 acres of mine in two days. We do the same thing with every cutting so that when it comes out of the silo it's all the same fiber level."

"The advantage of using haylage is that you don't have to worry about rain," he points out. "I couldn't do it this way if I was baling."

And Stricker has some definite ideas about how to get his low-fiber alfalfa to the silo, too. "We chop in the morning so we retain the leaves. The dew holds the leaves to the stems, and we have virtually no leaf loss this way." In order to cut his harvest losses when chopping wet hay, Stricker has shortened his wagon tongues and lengthened the chopper spout, bringing the wagon and the chopper closer together.

At 32 percent ADF, this pure alfalfa haylage is the foundation of Stricker's successful feeding program.

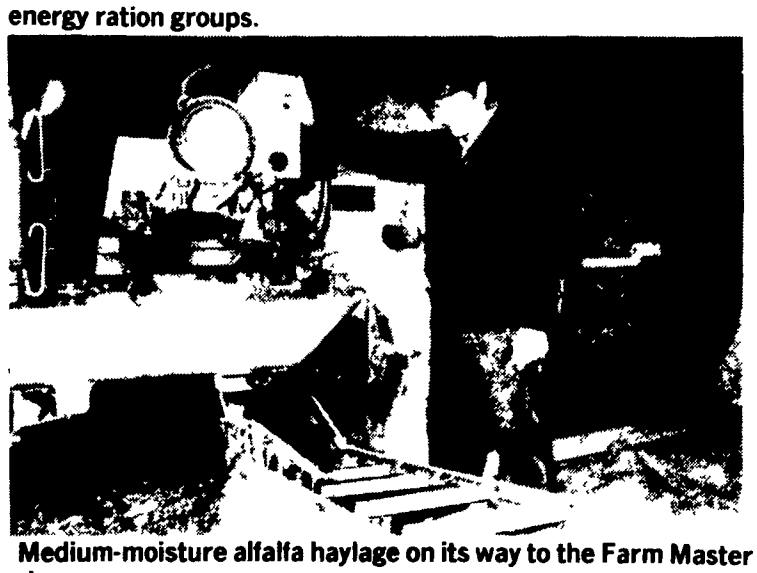
Chains in the barn and fences in the field keep Forrest Stricker's milking herd separated into high, medium and low-energy ration groups.

"I contend my harvest costs aren't any higher on a five-cut system than on a four-cut system."

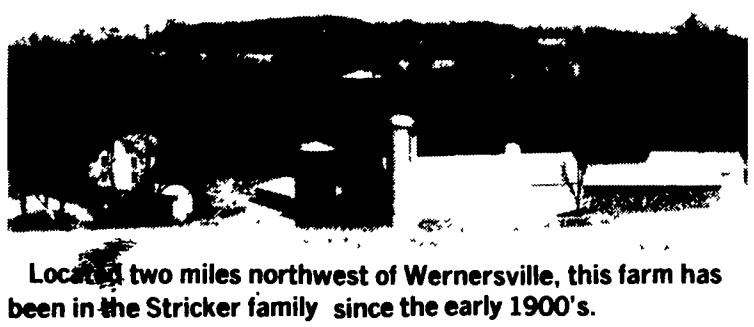
And Stricker does all of this five times a year. "I don't spend any more time in the field making five cuttings than you would making four cuttings when the alfalfa is bigger and more tangled," he maintains. "We move as fast as six to seven miles per hour, and with a nine-foot haybine we can cover five acres per hour."

"We rake every other windrow together so we only have to run the harvester around the field one-half as much. It's a lot cheaper to run a rake around the field than it is a harvester and wagon," he points out. Using this system, Stricker maintains that his harvest costs are no higher on a five-cut system than on the conventional four-cut system.

Even though his alfalfa stands last only three years under the five-cut system, he emphasizes that his grain savings more than compensate for the increased alfalfa management required. When corn is worth $2.50/bushel and soybean meal is bringing $250/ton, Stricker figures his five-cut system saves him about $2,000 annually when milking 60 cows. "And when corn goes to four dollars a bushel the system really looks attractive," he points out.



Medium-moisture alfalfa haylage on its way to the Farm Master mixer.



Located two miles northwest of Wernersville, this farm has been in the Stricker family since the early 1900's.

"I feel so strongly about TMR, that if you'd take my mixer away you could take my cows, too."

Incorporating his high quality alfalfa into a total mixed ration feeding program is another important part of Stricker's dairying strategy.

"I feel so strongly about TMR, that if you'd take my mixer away you could take my cows, too," he says. "I learned ration balancing through nutrition schools conducted by the Young Farmers and the Extension Service, along with help from my neighbor," says Stricker, adding that all the farm's livestock including dry cows and heifers are on a TMR program.

The dairyman keeps his milking herd on a three-ration schedule, with his high-energy ration balanced for 80 pounds of milk. "I like to see a forage-to-grain ratio of 60/40," he says, "and with low-fiber alfalfa you can do this. That cow is a ruminant and she's made to eat roughage, so let's get as much roughage into her as we can. It's healthier, which tends to make the cow live longer."

Stricker adheres to the following ration formula:

•High ration — 17 percent protein, 20.5 percent fiber, .84 percent calcium, .48 percent phosphorus.

•Medium ration — 16 percent protein, 22 percent fiber, .71 percent calcium, .45 percent phosphorus.

•Low ration — 14.8 percent protein, 24 percent fiber, .7 percent calcium, .4 percent phosphorus.

All three groups are top-dressed with shelled corn and soybean meal.

With the above three-ration program, Stricker claims to have paid for his mixer in one year through increased milk and butterfat production and feed efficiency. "It takes intense management," he says, adding that he checks haylage moisture levels daily and is prepared to alter the ration immediately if necessary.

But Stricker is quick to point out that he doesn't "live with the cows." Cows are fed twice a day, "so I can leave the barn at 8:30 in the morning and not come back until 3:30," he says. "And we hire a relief milker about once a month, for a day or two, so we can get away."

"Forrest's management techniques are what have made

Pen-Col bull draws $75,000 at Exclusive IV

LANCASTER — Pen-Col Dreamer, a May 1984, bull calf consigned by Pen-Col Farms, of Millville, led the way at the combined Exclusive IV and 331st Garden Spot Sales held at Lancaster's Guernsey Barn on Wednesday.

The Board Chairman son garnered the event's top bid of $75,000 from the Dreamer Syndicate, represented by Ed Lease of Bloomsburg.

Dreamer is out of the high-index dam, Pen-Col Bell Dream. "I didn't know they had numbers that high," quipped pedigree man Horace Backus as he reviewed Dream's +2090M, +$251 index.

Pen-Col Dreamer will be available for sampling through Tri-State.

And a second Pen-Col consignment captured the sale's second highest bid when Rothrock Golden Holstein Farm of Kempton, ended the competition for Pen-Col Bova Promise-ET, with a bid of $22,000.

A Bova daughter, Promise's dam is Monteray Petes Pride. Pride has a record at 3 years and 5 months of 33,802 pounds milk and 1424 pounds fat at 4.2 percent test. She stood 31st on the January 1985 Cow TPI List. Pride has an outstanding index of +1701M and +$207.

The third high selling consignment to the Exclusive IV sale was Pelhamdale Bell Charity - ET Out of Blossom-Acres Enchantment, the three-year-old Bell daughter was consigned by Thomas and Ellen Knowlton of Pelham, N.Y. and purchased by the Joy-Wil Syndicate, Wilmer Hostetter, Oxford, for $12,200.

Charity is scored VG-87 and has an index of +733M and +$94. Her record at 2 years and 2 months reached 23,055 pounds milk.

Charity has all excellent dams on the lower-side of her pedigree. Enchantment is scored 2E-92, GMD. Still milking at 6 years and 2 months, Enchantment's incomplete record is at 25,962 milk and 1120 fat at 4.3 percent test.

The average on the Exclusive IV part of the sale, which included 26 animals reached $6,054. The 331st Garden Spot Sale, including the milking herd dispersal of Stephen Stoltzfus, Jr., averaged $1282 on 67 animals.

The sales were managed by Backus Associates, Elizabethtown.

Baltimore FCB reports few delinquents, modest growth

BALTIMORE, Md. — The mid-Atlantic region's largest agricultural lender experienced modest growth in 1984 and a low level of delinquencies and foreclosures, reported Gene L. Swackhamer, President of the Farm Credit Banks of Baltimore.

Swackhamer's remarks were made to some 500 directors and managers representing stockholders of the Banks during the organization's annual meeting held in Williamsburg, Virginia.

Comprised of the Federal Land Bank (FLB), Federal Intermediate Credit Bank (FICB), and the Bank for Cooperatives (BC), the Baltimore Farm Credit Banks had over $3 billion in outstanding loan volume in 1984.

The Banks provide credit and financially related services to farmers and agricultural cooperatives in the states of Delaware, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and West Virginia, and in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. These states and the Commonwealth comprise the Baltimore District of the national Farm Credit System.

While acknowledging the stress in agriculture, and its particularly severe impact in some regions of the nation, both Swackhamer and Board Chairman James C. Cisney noted the comparatively healthy performance of the Banks and the farmers and agricultural cooperatives served by the Baltimore District Banks.

Citing performance statistics for 1984, Swackhamer noted that year-end reports for the Baltimore Banks and 26 affiliated Federal Land Bank Associations (FLBAs) and Production Credit Associations (PCAs) showed earnings of $36.6 million on a total agricultural loan portfolio of over $3 billion. Losses totalled less than one percent of the loan portfolio during the past year, and delinquencies accounted for less than 1 percent of all dollar volume of outstanding loans.

Swackhamer and the Banks' senior officers credit several reasons for the more stable environment of farmers in the region served by the Baltimore Banks:

- A diversified regional agriculture which tends to balance agricultural income over the District, as opposed to other areas of the country where income is based largely on the production of a limited number of agricultural products.
- Greater opportunites by farmers to generate additional income from off farm sources, such as full or part time jobs in the business community.
- Land values in the Baltimore District have tended to be less volatile because of urban, industrial, and recreational influences.

Shipping and handling costs are reduced in the mid-Atlantic states because of the proximity of large and major markets.

Borrowers in the mid-Atlantic region have tended to assume a more conservative debt posture than those in other regions of the country.

Growth in the loan volume of the FLB was a modest 1.2 percent over the 1983 level, and only 2.9 percent over 1982 loan volume. FICB loan volume declined for the second straight year, 0.6 percent less than the 1983 level of $715 million, and 5.5 percent less than 1982. The BC posted a slight increase of 3.2 percent in net l[illegible] million, or $2.8 million more than 1983.

Swackhamer noted that despite continued low commodity prices and relatively high production costs, the Federal Land Bank Associations in the states showed a farm loan delinquency rate of only 4.9 percent of borrowers at year-end, the same rate as in 1983. FICB affiliated Production Credit Associations reported a 3.6 percent delinquency rate as of December 31, 1984, a decrease from the 4.0 percent delinquency rate of a year earlier.

However, Swackhamer cautioned, "Thinking positive and making upbeat statements about what we've done well does not diminish the problems of financing agriculture. We are not immune from the stress now being experienced in the Midwest, and we will be tested in 1985."

But he noted that the Banks were well positioned to meet the challenge. "Yesterday's well-played hand means little unless repeated. While we report our success in 1984, our attention is already turned to the challenges of the present and the future. I am confident we will not only meet the test but expand our services to agriculture."

Spring Belle bull enters 21st Century Genetics

SHAWANO, Wis. — A Holstein bull calf, acquired from Spring Belle Farms, Lancaster, is now available for sampling from 21st Century Genetics Cooperative, Shawano, Wis.

21st Century Genetics is the continuation of Midwest Breeders Cooperative, Shawano and Minnesota Valley Breeders Association, New Prague.

One of the newest offerings from the full-service cattle breeding cooperative is 21H952 Spring-Belle Chrmn-Archer-ET, a son of Cal-Clark Board Chairman.

Combined with his maternal grandsire, Pawnee Farm Arlinda Chief, Archer has a Pedigree Index of +$903M, +34F, +$116 and a Genetic Index of +990M, +41F, +134. The calf has a pedigree that features high butterfat on the maternal side.

Archer's dam is Spring-Belle Arline EX-92-4E. As a five-year-old, she had 25,550 pounds of milk, 1,035 pounds of butterfat and a 4.1 percent fat test in 305 days. Her Cow Index is +383M, +35F, +$84. She has five consecutive lactations over 25,000 pounds of milk.

Archer is now housed at the 21st Century Genetics headquarters facility in Shawano. He is one of about 100 high genetic potential young sires enrolled each year in the cooperative's sampling program.

The program offers incentive payments, including a bonus for protein testing, to qualified users of junior sire semen.

Archer and the other young sires will have to wait over four years from sampling before their first Predicted Differences (PD's) are calculated. Only about one of six bulls sampled has credentials high enough to meet 21st Century Genetics' standards for its active dairy line-up housed in Shawano, Wis. and New Prague, Minn.

Dairy Policy Options for 1985

The Economic Environment of the Dairy Industry

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first in a series of nine articles about dairy policy options for 1985. Compiled by Jack Kirkland and Blair Smith, Extension ag economists at Penn State, the articles are written by a variety of national authorities on dairy policy issues.

We are printing these articles to help you better understand and evaluate the policies and programs the dairy industry faces. The first two articles explain the current situation, while the other seven review policies and programs that may be enacted to stabilize the dairy industry.

We are also printing the series to help you take a more effective stand for the program you choose to support. The 1985 Farm Bill has the potential of being one of the most important pieces of legislation to the dairy sector since 1949. You can influence dairy policy through your representatives in Congress, your general farm organization, your milk marketing cooperative and your political party.

For further information about these articles or about dairy policy, contact your Extension agent.

The key economic issues that will weigh heavily on the minds of dairy program policy makers as they debate and develop the 1985 farm bill are: 1) costs of the dairy program; 2) milk supply and demand balance; 3) dairy producer costs and income; and 4) the impact of proposed programs on long-term milk supplies.

Costs of the Dairy Price Support Program

The persistently high level of spending on dairy price support activities since 1980 has created much criticism of recent dairy policies. Since 1980, dairy price support activities have cost over $2 billion and have ranged from about ten to over 46 percent of the net agricultural commodity price support expenditures.

Prior to the 1980s the proportion of USDA net expenditures on dairy price support activities was typically less than ten percent. Since 1980, dairy program costs have represented about 22 percent of the cost of all USDA commodity programs.

The 1985 program costs will be lower due to the milk diversion program created by the 1983 Dairy Production Stabilization Act, but how much lower depends on what happens to production after the program ends in March.

Supply-Demand Balance

In 1983, the USDA Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC) in its operation of the dairy price support program purchased 16.8 billion pounds of milk or 12 percent of the milk produced in the U.S. (Table 1). For the period 1965 to 1975 removals averaged 3.7 percent of total production.

From 1980 to 1983 uncommitted CCC stocks increased substantially. Domestic distribution programs were expanded to rotate stocks and reduce inventories.

The milk diversion program was the most important causal factor in the four percent per month average decline in U.S. milk production during 1984. In absolute terms, commercial disappearance has grown steadily over the past decade (Table 1), but in 1983 domestic commercial disappearance was only about 85 percent of milk marketed by farmers. This compares to 93 percent for the ten-year period 1965-1974, and 94 percent for the five-year period 1975-1979.

Demand for dairy products improved materially in 1984 as consumer incomes rose due to an expanding economy and as retail dairy prices rose very little.

The total number of milk cows is down, but production per cow is climbing, the ratio of 46 replacements per 100 cows is six percent above the three-year average from 1981 to 1983. There is concern that national milk production could move back up as these heifers enter the U.S. milking herd. Some milk producers who participated in the milk diversion program intend to increase milk production to prediversion levels.

Many nonparticipating producers have been increasing output continuously. There is every indication that these producers will continue this trend in the coming year. The increasing trend in production per cow will exacerbate the potential for supply imblance caused by this possible increased heifer supply.

In 1984, the milk diversion program aggravated regional milk supply-demand balances, particularly leaving the Southeast short of milk. This shortage fosters an overriding concern to design a support program that holds national supply and demand in balance without creating regional problems.

A potential problem is a support program resulting in higher consumer prices. High consumer prices could hinder the long-term growth of product demand particularly if overall economic growth slows somewhat. This reduced demand for dairy products could be replaced by demand for cheaper substitutes.

To maintain market share, dairy products must offer consumers a reasonably priced product that consistently meets consumer nutrition and flavor criteria. Processors and handlers want raw milk and finished products of consistently high quality, stable shelf life, and the potential for generating consistent profit.

Producer Price and Income Trends

Producer pay prices follow the milk support price closely. Average milk prices had increased about two percent per year from 1980 through 1983. Negotiated Class I premiums during the first seven months of 1984 were down 5.7 cents from 1983 levels. During the first eight months of 1984, Minnesota-Wisconsin prices were three percent below year earlier levels because of the drop in support prices. However, prices received for milk increased in October 1984 one percent from year earlier levels.

Total cash receipts of dairy producers had been increasing in the 1981 to 1983 period, encouraging production resources to be invested in dairying. However, cash receipts (including diversion payments) for the first five months of 1984 were down about five percent from year earlier levels. In all areas of the country, except parts of the West-Southwest, total costs of producing milk increased from 1982 to 1983. Nationally, variable costs increased an average of 8.5 percent from 1982 to 1983, and total costs jumped two percent.

Because of the PIK program and drought conditions in 1983, feed costs averaged about 15 percent above year earlier levels for the first half of 1984, but fall ten percent during the last three months of 1984. Rising price expectations and lower costs could slow the exit of resources out of dairying.

Potential Future Developments

Several developments on the horizon have the potential to increase milk supplies:

1. Bovine growth hormones which increase milk production in the cow will be available in a few years.
2. Embryo transfer offers dairymen the potential to accelerate the development and increase the availability of the numbler of high quality, high producing cows.
3. Computer technology offers customized single cow feeding through computer controlled feeders. Computers can aid in management decisions through simulation techniques.
4. Equipment such as self-attaching milk claws is being developed that promises to increase the potential number of cows milked through a parlor.
5. Farm water removal offers the potential of storing more farm milk in existing bulk tanks and tankers and hauling it at a lower cost.

The key to an improved dairy situation is a balanced milk supply and demand. It cannot be denied that the current milk diversion program has reduced production. It is readily apparent that an improved economy and stable retail prices have encouraged demand.

The promotion program promises to complement improved economic conditions and further stimulate demand for dairy products. There is no certainty, however, how long it will take or to what extent it will stimulate demand.

The rate of economic recovery and price levels will influence the rate of increases in demand. The fear that producers will increase production after the diversion program ends weighs heavily on policy makers' minds. Increasing replacement numbers and production per cow, plus the potential technical developments, loom as a perplexing problem in balancing supply and demand.

Dairy policy makers must weigh each of these considerations carefully. What they develop for 1985 could set the pace for the next two decades of dairy industry policy.

Cornell develops wilt-resistant alfalfa

ITHACA, NY — With the arrival of the growing season, the battle against a destructive fungal disease that causes alfalfa plants to die of thirst is expected to intensify once again across the northern United States.

Spearheading the clash are several Cornell University scientists with a new weapon that could blunt the onslaught of "Verticillium wilt," a new fungal disease now menacing alfalfa crops from New York to as far west as Washington.

Ready for use this spring, the weapon is a brand new alfalfa variety that Cornell scientists say has the natural ability to grow well, even in fields infested with the disease organism.

Named "Oneida VR," the new alfalfa is recommended for use in infested fields as well as areas close to them. The letter code "VR" following the world Oneida stands for Verticillium resistance.

Rated as the most resistant alfalfa in the nation, Oneida VR was developed by Donald R. Viands and his colleagues — plant breeders Royce P. Murphy and Carl C. Lowe and plant pathologist Roy L. Millar — all in the New York State College of Agriculture and Life Sciences at Cornell.

"Our new alfalfa was the most resistant variety among a dozen resistant ones tested in 1984 at the University of Wisconsin," Viands says.

In addition to its built-in resistance to Verticillium wilt, the new alfalfa has strong resistance to two other common alfalfa diseases — bacterial wilt and Fusarium wilt. As a bonus, it also is moderately resistant to anthracnose and Phytophthora root rot.

Named after the fungal genus Verticillium, the wilting disease plugs the water-conducting tissues of alfalfa plants. The first noticeable effect of this fungus-induced "water shortage" is the wilting of upper leaflets on infected shoots.

"The disease normally damages two- to three-year-old alfalfa stands," Viands explains. "It is spread by contaminated seed or harvest equipment and usually takes several seasons to spread in the field."

Verticillium wilt has a long history. It was first found in Sweden in 1918. During the 1950s, it caused major crop losses in the cooler alfalfa-growing regions of Europe. In the United States, the disease was first detected in 1976 in Washington state. Within the past five years, the disease has been detected in alfalfa growing areas in most of the norther tier of states and the provinces of Canada.

The disease established a toehold in New York State in 1981, when it was found in some isolated alfalfa fields. It has since been confirmed in at least 30 counties across the state.

Although the Verticillium disease is now widely distributed in New York State, less than five percent of the state's alfalfa acreage have been affected so far.

Used as a major component of feed for dairy animals, alfalfa is revered by farmers as the "queen of the forages." New York devotes nearly one million acres to alfalfa production — about 80 percent of 2.3 million acres used for production of all types of hay valued at nearly $450 million in 1984.

In combating diseases affecting alfalfa and other agricultural crops, scientists agree that the only lasting, effective solution is to create resistant varieties. Such work, however, usually takes 10 years or more to accomplish.

Realizing the urgency of the situation, Cornell scientists set out to design a new alfalfa in a crash program launched in 1981, when the Verticillium disease was about to establish its foothold in New York State.

Working virtually around the clock, they succeeded in developing Oneida VR within two years, a feat almost unprecedented in the history of plant breeding.

Just one year ago, the new alfalfa was ready for seed

Labor and crop choices for direct marketing

MORGANTOWN, WV — Whenever veteran produce growers get together, there's bound to be helpful hints, rules to swear by and the like pertaining to production come up in discussion, particularly if there are also just-getting-started-in-the-business youngsters in attendance.

This was the case at the first annual Direct Marketing Conference, held here recently, and necessary tools for commercial vegetable and fruit production were outlined in the context of several discussions.

• Irrigation. Even though West Virginia hasn't suffered a severe drought since the 30's, irrigation systems were mentioned over and over again by seasoned growers as a necessary expenditure. Primarily for frost protection, irrigation in some areas that need it also helps prevent even slight crop losses possible on marginally dry years, like 1983.

• Labor. In a "pick-your-own" operation, sufficient skilled labor is needed to supervise customers who come to pick. If one is hand-harvesting the crop for sale at farmers', tailgate, or roadside markets, a ready and adequate work force is an absolute necessity. Families play a large role in meeting the labor requirements for W. Va. growers, whether they are the growers' own offspring utilized for weeding and harvesting, or urban and suburban families that make an annual pilgrimage to a PYO strawberry grower's to enjoy a fruitful day's outing together.

If the farmer's own family is the major labor contingent, he must make sure all hands are available at harvest time.

"You have to love the way of life," as Mary Jane Kerns of Morgantown says. Plans must be made for the day when invariably, as in the case of Mrs. Kerns, the children who have comprised the muscle grow up, and move away, get married, or otherwise are involved in off-farm jobs and responsibilities and thus unavailable to help with the farm work anymore.

Barring family, producers seem to think, homemakers make the best pickers. Others, pointing to the increase in wives working away from the home and therefore a decrease in fulltime housewives, believe that high school kids can be a reliable source of local labor.

The notion of welcoming teenagers into their fields prompted chuckles and scoffs of disbelief from some farmers; but adolescents, if selected carefully and supervised accordingly, have proven their worth to many growers who harvest their crops to sell at roadside, tailgate, or farmers' markets.

What To Grow?

Crops grown in West Virginia run the gamut from early brassicas to Halloween pumpkins. Cabbage is a favorite with the many 'kraut-makers in the state.

Cauliflower and broccoli, two other cool-weather crops, are currently on the rise in popularity with consumers due to their multiple uses as both cooked and raw salad vegetables.

Peas are a tricky crop; in some more urban areas PYO peas do not go over very well, because no one wants to buy peas they have to shell and pick.

Rural areas are harder to read. People who still take the time to make homemade sauerkraut will possibly provide a market for PYO, tailgate, roadside, or farmers' market peas; and the new snap or sugar peas available now also offer a solution to the shelling dilemma.

Corn, snap beans, dry beans, pumpkins, potatoes, melons, sweet peppers and sweet corn are all traditional menu items in West Virginia and consequently are safe bets, all things being equal, for the direct marketer to grow in the Mountain State.

Thai and Mexican chile peppers were a 'hot' ticket item for truck farmer Mary Jane Kerns this past year. Growing interest in ethnic cooking and blooming Hispanic and Oriental populations can open a new market for previously unpopular or obscure vegetables, as it did for Mrs. Kerns in Morgantown.

Strawberries, raspberries, blueberries, and tree fruits are virtually wide open markets for expansion in West Virginia. A critical assessment of soil, climate, management skills, and the particular type of direct marketing effort most suited to the farmers' own situation would almost guarantee success with a fruit operation (the only possible exception being apples, in the Eastern Panhandle, where they are already so many growers).

Varietal choices are apparently at the grower's discretion in tree and small fruits. Some vegetable growers, however, cite certain varieties of some crops as being especially popular with West Virginia consumers.

Silver Queen sweet corn wins raves from Morgantown east to the Panhandle counties. Ed Groce, a Preston county grower, says Elba NY 59 is the potato he grows, one which fits his operation, but he remarked on the growing fast food industry that would soon create an eastern demand for the Russet-type potato varieties.

The Russet is also becoming more popular with the consumer at large, primarily for its baking qualities, a fact the direct marketer of potatoes should take note of.

Consumer preference and choices are the overriding factors to consider as Tom Anderson, a young grower from Gay, West Virginia, found out.

"It don't sell," Anderson deadpanned, referring to summer yellow "crooked-neck squash", as he called it. In his short, to-the-point presentation at the DM Conference, Anderson related his experiences with various crops, noting which would sell and which would not at his primary direct market outlet, the farmers' market in his area.

John Scott, Jr., Mercer County WVU Extension Agent, provided some basic marketing data obtained from consumers who shop at direct markets:

• Quality was important to consumers 86%, or a majority of the time. This points to the real potential for growth of direct markets — since farmers can control the quality of their own produce much more easily than can half a dozen middlemen and retailers.

• Appearance of Produce and the Seller rated second in importance by percentage points. This, too indicates areas of improvement for the direct marketer, and a chance to beat out the middleman.

• Prices, surprisingly enough, were important only 63% of the time to consumers. In addition to getting better than wholesale prices for their goods, consequently, farmers stand to collect a premium retail price for produce if they are willing to learn and apply and put forth the effort to direct-market their own fruits and vegetables.

What if Farm Bill gets stalemated?

NEWARK, Del. — As debate continues over drafting of the 1985 Farm Bill, the possibility of a stalemate cannot be overlooked. "Actions to reduce the federal deficit will orient bill drafting toward cutting farm program costs," says University of Delaware extension farm policy specialist Gerald F. Vaughn.

However, the dire straits of many farmers and a greater number of affected interest groups than ever before will make it harder–perhaps even impossible–to reach agreement on the bill, he predicts. "Some observers think an act replacing current farm legislation may not pass in 1985 and must again be attempted in 1986."

What would happen if such a stalemate occurs?

According to Vaughn, some authorized programs would revert to provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, the Agricultural Act of 1949 and related statutes. Other programs would end.

Authority for about 11 programs would revert to previous statutes. These reversions pertain mainly to commodity programs–provisions for production adjustment, price support payments, and Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC) sales policy.

Authority for about 29 other programs would end. These include authorization for agricultural research and extension funding, P.L. 480 ("Food for Peace"), food stamps, payment limitations for farmers under specific commodity programs, and the Agricultural Export Credit Revolving Fund.

Reverting to previous statutes would affect commodity programs in ways that farmers need to consider, the specialist says. For example:

• Wheat: Wheat would have price support, but without deficiency or disaster payments. Wheat marketing quotas, acreage allotments, marketing certificates, and a national referendum of wheat growers would be authorized.

• Dairy: Price support for milk would be mandatory at a level between 75 and 90 percent of parity.

How would this compare overall with the cost of current farm legislation?

"At present, it looks as though reverting to previous statutes would provide higher price supports and thus result in potentially costlier programs," Vaughn says. "In the months ahead, we'll likely hear more about the consequences of reverting to previous statutes."

our production go up and our cash flow," says his wife Barbara.

For the skeptics, Stricker maintains a battery of statistics that are hard to dispute, including the fact that last year his herd produced 921,000 pounds of milk at a feed cost of only $8,600.

And it appears that a number of other dairymen are also impressed with the numbers generated by the Stricker herd. Forrest currently formulates rations for five other dairy farmers, a chore that he says involves one on-farm visit, followed by about an hour's-worth of pencil pushing per month.

"I enjoy the challenge," concludes the young dairyman. "I guess I'm a pioneer of sorts."

And for this Berks County pioneer, the frontier is never farther away than the dairy barn.

following the end of diversion, noting that economic incentive simply isn't present for a massive new expenditure by dairy producers.

"I think that, given the basic economics of the situation, we are looking at lower prices, and that is going to mean less milk," said Fraher. The reduction in milk, he adds, may take several months, but it will happen, "as resources move out of the system."

Milk production dropped an average of three percent during 1984, according to federal statistics. Producers who participated in the dairy diversion received a payment of $10 per hundredweight for milk "diverted" from the marketplace, when compared to a base period.

The program received most of its funding from a 50-cent per hundredweight assessment on milk. That assessment will be removed April 1, but will be coupled with a probable 50-cent drop in support prices.

hat - which I am now keeping with pride," relates Jeffers.

Properly hatted, he headed with host Jerry Rutter to the hog finishing house, to assist with sorting and loading market pigs. A full morning in the hog operation included an overview with Carolyn Rutter of the "flow charts," the finely-honed system of keeping track of the production and fattening records on the sows and market animals. Along with breifings on the mating and reproductive portion of the business, Jeffers got hands-on experience giving iron shots and clipping teeth on newborn pigs in the farrowing house.

Put to work helping to feed, Jeffers was impressed with the "incredible vibrations" emanating from the swine production houses as hungry hogs lined up for breakfast.

After sharing business philosophy with Jerry Rutter over lunch- ham, of course - the host and guest then spent some time viewing the farm's grain production and handling facilities, feed rations, and the beef feedlot end of the Rutter operation.

"One of the most interesting times was the part of our day spent on marketing, and the futures," says Jeffers. Carolyn, who is in charge of the hog production business, daily contacts the Pennsylvania Farmers Association's PACMA marketing representative. Jeffers participated in these marketing evaluation discussions, via telephone microphones, and was impressed with the details studied in the marketing program.

"That helps tell you where you have to be, whether you expand, or scale back, what to do to survive - the economics part," he observed. "There's a lot of gamble involved. That's the most eye-opening part."

Jeffers, with a dairy farm background through boyhood summers spent on his family's Watertown, N.Y., farm, sees the business part of farming as the most changed and challenging.

"For hostess Carolyn Rutter, it was a "very interesting day," marked with numerous discussions on Jeffer's thought-provoking questions such as "How can you justify capital investments?" Marketing commanded much exchange of ideas and information, as did the current media attention to the plight of the family farm and the effect of the strong U.S. dollar on the export market.

Jeffers, who does visit farms frequently for evaluation of insurance needs, would like to see the program expanded, at least in the Geesey-Glatfelter-Zarfoss firm where he's employed, to include many more of the business office staff, from those who handle the farm insurance files to computer operators.

"It was a valuable day for me, and I think it would be for them, giving them even more pride in their jobs, more perspective, in what they're doing."

production in Idaho, where the climatic conditions for seed production are idea. To speed up the seed production, Cornell researchers raised thousands of seedlings on the Ithaca campus. Later, the seedlings were transported to Idaho for transplanting.

"It was a collaborative effort of researchers, technicians, and seed growers from the start to the finish," Viands says. "Because we had only one season for seed production, the seed supply available this year is tight, but it should be more plentiful a year from now."

Oneida VR is the offspring of two alfalfa varieties — Oneida and Vertus. A Cornell variety in use since 1970, Oneida is a popular variety grown in the Northeast.

Vertus, from Sweden, was used as a parent because it has strong resistance to Verticillium wilt. One major weakness of this Swedish alfalfa is its susceptibility to bacterial wilt, the first major disease on alfalfa in North America.

"We were lucky because we didn't have to start from scratch," Viands says. We already had two excellent varieties available to get the best traits from them. In fact, Oneida VR is more resistant to the disease than its Swedish mother."

Reliable Feeding

Hard-packed and frozen silage makes feeding more than a routine chore.

Patz gives you two solutions to the problem — the RD-820 ring-drive silo unloader and the 98B surface-drive silo unloader. Both have a double-hook gathering chain with hardened steel cutters and claws that cut through frozen and packed silage.

- Spring-tensioned powered cutter keeps silo walls free of buildup.
- Preset depth-of-cut control makes feeding truly automatic (98B).
- Powerful blowers with adjustable impeller blades do the job.

We'll show you how to get the most performance for your money.

Adams County woman helps seamstresses prepare for Easter

BY SALLY BAIR
Staff Correspondent

BONNEAUVILLE — It is a long-standing Easter tradition to have new clothing for the occasion. This stems, in part, from medieval times when one new set of clothes per season was about all one could afford. So when Easter, with its tradition of rebirth came, it was time for everyone in the family to do new outfits. It was much more a matter of cleanliness than a matter of style.

Today, the tradition continues, probably because Easter marks the beginning of the spring season and people are eager to be rid of their bulky winter clothing and get ready for the lighter garments of spring.

Naomi Herr offers some assistance to seamstresses who are making their own spring clothing. She operates a fabric store out of her home near Bonneauville in Adams County. Her shop, "Naomi's This & That," is located along Storms Store Road, and features a Gettysburg address.

It is an outgrowth of a business that began in her farm home in 1969. Naomi said, "I started selling fabric in one upstairs room of the house, then I went to a second room." Before long, her business outgrew her home, and she and her husband Glenn purchased a trailer and set up shop there. Soon the trailer, too, was filled with fabrics and other notions.

Naomi, the mother of three, recalls, "I started when my youngest started school." She was encouraged in her early efforts by a Lancaster countian to whom she and five others turned to find coverings, the traditional caps of the Mennonite religion. Naomi began by offering the coverings for sale in her home as well as "some material - not much."

Today the business fills a huge room built for that purpose as an addition to their ranch home, which was built on the edge of their farm when their son, Mervin, was ready to move into the farm house with his family. Naomi moved into the new location in 1984 and is enjoying the light and space in the room.

A large part of the business is mail order, with people ordering fabric from as far away as California, Wyoming and Canada. How did she get into mail order? Naomi says, "It's just word of mouth." She advertises in the local advertiser, but not beyond that. Visiting relatives of local people like what they find in her store and when they return home they contact her for more.

The mail order business is primarily for her knit fabrics, of which she has an unusual array of both color and patterns. To accommodate her mail order customers, she often sends samples from which they can choose. She once had someone ask for a sample of everything in the store, something she was hard pressed to supply!

The knits range from double knit to the lighter, more versatile "softique," which won't snag. She recommends using fine pins because of the density of the knits. When sewing, she uses a yellow band ball point needle to eliminate stiches slipping, and she keeps the fabric pulled taut.

Knits are Naomi's favorite fabric because she says, "They truly are easy care. You just wash them and hang them on a hanger - they are no iron. Also, they give, if you gain weight."

Ruth Ellen, Naomi's daughter-in-law, frequently helps out in the store, and also does some of the sewing for the clothing carried in the store. Here she replenishes the zipper rack.

She cautions her customers to cut all the fabric one way because the knits have a tendency to have a different sheen if cut in different directions.

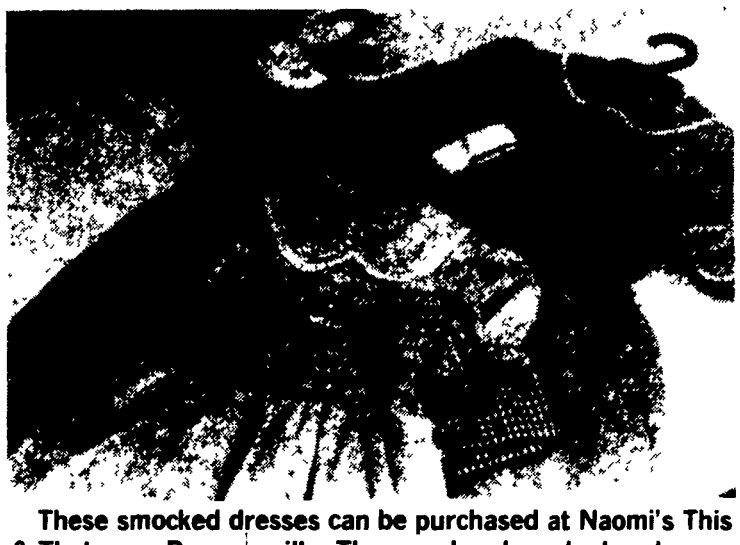
Although knits make up the largest part of her inventory, she also carries flannels, corduroy, linings and fine cottons suitable for quilting and quilting crafts.

In addition to her fabrics, Naomi devotes a portion of her store to clothing, sewn especially for her by seamstresses she employs. The clothing is for all sizes, from young boys and girls to women. A perennial favorite are the smocked dresses she carries. She keeps some on the rack, and takes orders as well. Her store also offers ready-made cape dresses.

Naomi stresses that the finished clothing is a small part of her business, adding that her seamstresses can barely keep up with the need. She said some weeks she doesn't sell any clothing, but one record day she sold 13 dresses. Because of this, she tries to keep a good selection of sizes and styles available.

Alterations on ready-made clothing in the store are usually done by Naomi. She said that she enjoys sewing, though barely finds time to sew dresses for herself. She does some of the hand alterations in the shop between customers. She said she didn't learn to sew until after she was married. "My mother-in-law taught me to put in a zipper." She did make dresses for her children's weddings, including her daughter's wedding dress.

Naomi keeps a well-worn book containing names and addresses of mail order customers, as well as measurements of her clothing customers. She said extensive records are an important part of her work.



These smocked dresses can be purchased at Naomi's This & That near Bonneauville. They are hand-smoked and sewn by local seamstresses into a wide variety of colors and patterns.

These are a sample of the wide array of fabrics which Naomi carries in the store adjacent to her new ranch home. She carries knits in almost every color and pattern, as well as other popular fabrics.

Salesmen call regularly with the latest in styles and fabrics, and Naomi said she places an order at least once a week. All material is delivered to her by United Parcel Service, which is how she ships her mail order requests.

She keeps one pattern book on hand to help customers determine how much material they need, but she does not sell patterns. She said she is the only store in the area which sells invisible zippers, and she carries almost every other sewing notion needed to complete a garment.

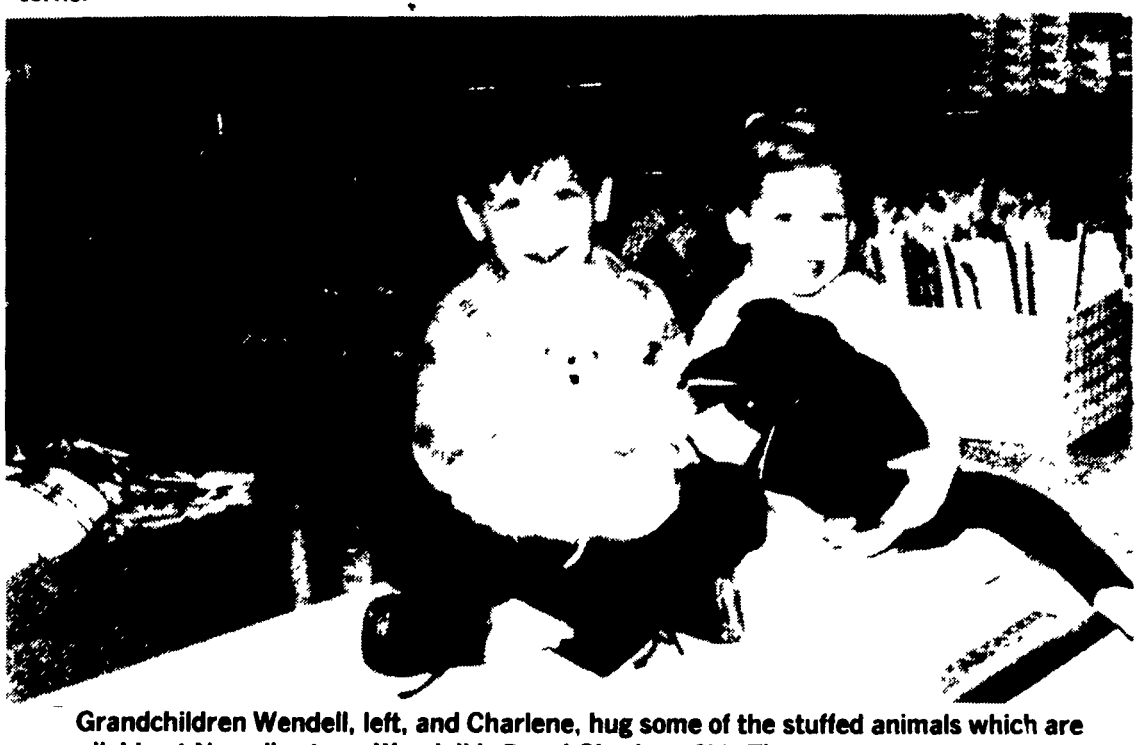
Customers often want help with decisions, including a few who request that Naomi choose their fabric, something she doesn't like to do. But she said she usually helps determine amounts of fabric, what kinds of interfacing and what kind of buttons might be needed.

Naomi says more people are sewing their own clothing because they don't like the styles available in stores. She often gets special orders for look-alike shirts and dresses.

Another good source of customers are the ever-increasing craftsmen who need fabrics for making their favorite craft project.

The store is filled with plaques, mottoes and handmade craft items, which Naomi carries on consignment. She also has homemade doll clothes, including Barbie doll clothing, and warm and cuddly homemade stuffed animals. Match box cards are available at her store, as well as

(Turn to Page B4)



Grandchildren Wendell, left, and Charlene, hug some of the stuffed animals which are available at Naomi's store. Wendell is 5 and Charlene 2½. They are frequent visitors to the store.

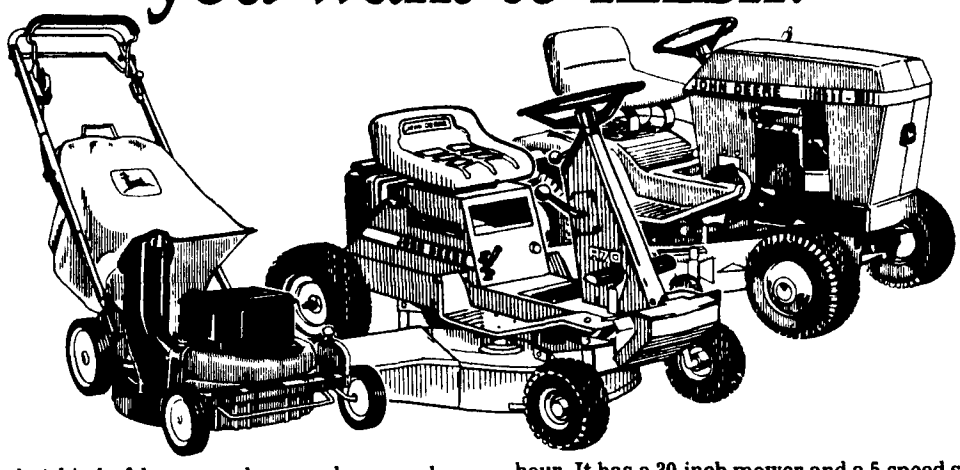
The Long Green Line™

JOHN DEERE

Nothing runs like a Deere™

Once you've decided to mow with the best, it's only a question of how fast you want to finish.



No matter what kind of lawn you have or how much time you want to spend on it, there's a dependable John Deere mower designed for the job.

If you have a lawn of a quarter acre or less, your best bet is probably a walk-behind mower. There are several models available, including the 21-inch self-propelled version. It comes with a dependable 4-hp engine, a deep die-cast aluminum deck, and rear-wheel gear drive.

If you own a larger lawn, you may prefer one of five John Deere riding mowers. even the 8-hp R70, the lowest cost model, can mow ¾ of an acre in about one hour. It has a 30-inch mower and a 5-speed shift-on-the-go gear-drive transmission. A 6½-bushel rear grass bag is optional. If you mow an acre or more, a John Deere lawn tractor may be in order. The 116, for instance, with a 46-inch mower and 16-hp engine, can mow an acre of lawn in about 45 minutes.

See us today for the mowing equipment right for you.

On being a farm wife - And other hazards

Joyce Bupp

"Do you need 'wheels' today?"

When the farmer comes to ask me that question, I immediately know that all the "wheels" in the family are most likely already spoken for.

Such frequently case now that we have two vehicles - and three drivers in the family. The pickup was headed with him to a local farm sale. And our family car had been signed out for the day with our newest driver, for a clothing excursion by both siblings.

"No, I can't do without wheels today," I assured him, sticking another seedling in the soil of flats in the little greenhouse, my personal refuge from bawling, hungry calves and ringing telephones.

I meandered through the rest of the morning, enjoying the chance to hang out laundry in the warm spring breeze, to just be home, alive on such a gorgeous day, with nothing more pressing on my time than straw scattered over the living room rug.

(Any of you who read this column with any regularity may guess where we're headed at this point.)

The last soggy sock was being pinned to the line when a banging noise at the barn shattered my reverie.

Please. No. Not this. No!

As those first couple of black and white heads poked around the calf barn corner, I sprinted out of the yard and up around the barn.

What greeted me was a scene reminiscent of an old Roy Rogers movie, where the herd is scared by the bad guys and begin stampeding form Kansas to South Dakota.

Glory be, and not a Trigger on the place. Not even an old pony.

The gate to the bunk feeder area was standing several feet open, to the delight of grinning Holsteins. "How'd you all like to be hamburger?" I screamed, adding further opinions about loose cows and open gates. A few headed back for the gate.

Three headed west toward the neighborhood housing development. Two dozen were milling around the house and backyard. A cadre of more adventurous types were loping east out of the road, sniffing the enticing scent of open fields in all directions.

By the time crops manager Denny had abandoned his flu-fighting sick bed, bringing along his three youngsters ready to give chase, we had cows from here to kingdom come. Already the first wave had reached the far end of the bottomland fields, several hundred yards away, raced back toward the house, then high-tailed it devilishly back again.

No car. No pickup. Even my motorcycle remains in parts in the shop, being "fixed."

No wheels.

My attempts to rev up our son's dirt bike leaves me with naught but a big, bruised brushburn, where my foot miscalculated the kick-start mechanism.

Big black and white bodies have disappeared into the woodlot at the pasture swamp, and others gaze thoughtfully on the horizon toward the open fields, meadowland - and interstate highway in the distance.

Breathless sprinting through the fields finally carried me beyond the most distant travelers. Following on the tractor, Denny rode "shotgun" on the eastern flank of the contours, while I beat the bushes (literally) for stragglers in the woods.

Three brave youngsters, each considerably taller than these carousing four-footed escapees, armed themselves with willow switches, standing firm at their posts around the yard, and helping to "yell" the milkers back into the dairy barn.

Please Lord. If there is an afterlife for dairy farm wives, in which we spend eternity helping to tend heavenly herds, could you please arrange to equip us with wheels along with our wings?

books, cards, children's gifts, jars of buttons and batting for quilting. In a different line, she has a refrigerator with farm fresh eggs from her husband and son's layer operation, and Tingley boots, because "that's what we use," she says.

Working with the public comes naturally for Naomi since she grew up standing on market with her parents. Living in Rohrerstown, in Lancaster County, her parents stood on both Southern and Northern markets, selling smoked meats and cheese. Her maternal grandfather also had a grocery store, so Naomi says retailing "is in your blood."

Her husband Glenn can be called upon to help in the store, and Naomi says he helps in filling large mail orders. He is still active on the adjacent farm. In fact, Naomi says she sometimes helps collect eggs when needed. In turn, daughter-in-law Ruth can be called upon in an emergency to help with customers, and she also does some sewing for the store. When Ruth helps Naomi, Naomi gets the pleasure of the company of her three grandchildren. A fourth grandchild is in Maryland, where her two daughters have made their homes.

About her business, Naomi says, "I have had discouragements. I couldn't make a living off the store - my husband calls it my hobby."

Her "hobby" keeps her busy enough that she has few outside activities with the exception of those she has at Hershey's Mennonite Church at Admire, where her family belongs. She closes the store on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Working with customers and filling their requests gives Naomi pleasure, and she enjoys satisfaction in meeting new people. The fabric store which began in her home is now a full-fledged business, offering home sewers all they need.

Ladies Have You Heard?

By Doris Thomas

Lancaster Extension Home Economist

GET OFF THE WORRY-GO-ROUND

Are financial worries getting you down? Do you find the least little unexpected expense is sending you into a tizzy? If so, it's time to get off the worry-go-round and take control of your financial planning.

The first step to financial planning is to know where you are right now. Only then will you be able to figure out where you'll be tomorrow. Just because your family budgeting seemed to work last year is no guarantee it will work now. Even without the frightening changes from pay cuts, layoffs and loss of job, ordinary changes in family needs and interests nearly always mean a change in where the money goes, whether or not you plan ahead.

Few of us have the financial resources to do everything we'd like — many of us don't even seem to have enough to cover what we need. The only answer, the only way to reduce the nagging worry, is to do some basic family financial management. Do it not once, but on a regular basis to keep yourself on track.

Who should be involved in planning where the money goes? That answer is simple — everyone who spends it! That means all adults in the household, teenagers for sure, and even children need to know where the money comes from and how it's spent.

Begin with a positive attitude. Even if you discover you are wildly overextended, a positive attitude will help you take action toward protecting the financial security of your family. If you are in financial difficulty there is something you can do — if in fact, you don't take the first step, your worries can only get worse.

Plan. Find out where you are now. Write down everything you owe, list your regular monthly expenses and your known monthly income including benefits, salaries, and any other solid sources of income you may have. Don't include the extra income that may or may not materialize.

Then project yourself ahead month by month including the irregular expenses we all have such as insurance premiums, taxes, quarterly payments for garbage pick-up or newspapers, semester fees for lessons, occasional expenses for clothes, and car repair. Include your known changes in income. If your unemployment benefits are due to run out in April, then make your April balance sheet reflect that change. In short, be realistic and honest with yourself. Where does your money come from and where does it go? Have you made any provision to save for the future? Have you been paying your bills regularly to protect your credit? Keep asking the questions and write down the answers. Then make a plan that fits what you have.

Once you've made a plan, keep it flexible, make changes as necessary but don't just work in the dark. Your plan is your road map to meeting financial goals and solving financial worries. The realities of your financial plan may not make you happy. You may well be disappointed that you have to give up the extras or even some things you now consider necessities. But you will find that sticking to a realistic plan will at least help to reduce the unnecessary worry of a financial merry-go-round.

Enjoy family, food this Easter

Picture, if you will, a table loaded with ham, candied yams, and a fancy salad. The family is gathered round, feasting, laughing and enjoying one another's company.

This traditional Easter scene will appear in homes all across the nation next week. But a lot of hard work and preparation in the kitchen are necessary to make this happy scene possible.

With a little pre-planning though, getting a family meal together doesn't have to be a monumental task. Do the grocery shopping before the crowds arrive at the supermarket, make some dishes ahead of time, and then sit back, and enjoy the pleasant company of your family.

ROAST FRESH HAM WITH LEMON HONEY GLAZE

Use a 6 to 7-pound boneless fresh ham. Preheat oven to 325°F. Remove and discard any excess fat from ham. Sprinkle ham with 1 teaspoon salt and dash pepper; place on rack in a shallow roasting pan. If meat thermometer is to be used, insert in center of roast. Roast ham until thermometer registers 170°F.— 3½ to 4 hours; during the last half hour, brush with Lemon Honey Glaze (see recipe below). Slice and serve.

LEMON HONEY GLAZE

1 tablespoon, plus 1 teaspoon honey
2 teaspoons firmly packed brown sugar
⅔ cup unfermented apple cider
2 to 3 whole cloves
2 tablespoons lemon juice

In small saucepan, combine honey and sugar and heat until melted and bubbly; add cider and cloves and bring to a boil. Add lemon juice and continue cooking until some of liquid evaporates and mixture becomes syrupy, about 5 minutes. Use to glaze ham as directed above.

HAWAIIAN CHEESE BALL

8 ounces cream cheese, softened
1 large can crushed pineapples, drained
1 small jar maraschino cherries, drained and chopped

Mix well and shape into a ball and roll in chopped peanuts. Great with ham.

CREAMY MUSTARD POTATOES

1 tablespoon plus 1 teaspoon margarine
2 tablespoons minced shallots or onion
1 tablespoon plus 1 teaspoon all-purpose flour
½ cup canned chicken broth
1 tablespoon Dijon-style mustard
1 cup evaporated skimmed milk
Dash of pepper and salt
1½ pounds boiled and peeled small white potatoes (hot)
1 tablespoon chopped parsley

In small saucepan, heat margarine until bubbly and hot; add shallots or onion and saute briefly. Sprinkle with flour and stir to combine; gradually stir in chicken broth. Add mustard and cook, stirring constantly, until mixture is thickened; add milk, salt and pepper and bring to a boil. Remove from heat; add to potatoes and toss well to coat. Serve sprinkled with parsley.

This Easter feast features roast ham with lemon honey glaze. Complementing the ham are cabbage-apple slaw, mixed vegetable saute, and creamy mustard potatoes.

FROSTY LEMON PIE

Crust:
1 cup graham cracker crumbs
⅔ cup ground pecans
6 tablespoons butter, melted
2 tablespoons sugar
Filling:
3 eggs, separated
1 cup sugar
1½ tablespoons grated lemon peel
¼ cup fresh lemon juice
2 tablespoons cold water
1 cup whipping cream, whipped
Whipped cream for garnish
Lemon peel

For crust, combine all ingredients. Press onto bottom and sides of a 9-inch pie plate. Freeze.

For filling, beat egg yolks until thick and lemon colored. Add ½ cup sugar, grated peel, juice and water. Cook in heavy saucepan over low heat until thickened, 10 to 15 minutes. Cool completely.

Beat egg whites until soft peaks form. Gradually beat in remaining ½ cup of sugar. Slowly fold lemon mixture into beaten egg whites. Fold in whipped cream. Pour into frozen crust. Freeze until firm. Just before serving, garnish with additional whipped cream and lemon peel.

GREEN SPRING SALAD

¾ cup oil
¾ cup (6 ounces) frozen apple juice, thawed
⅓ cup ketchup
3 tablespoons cider vinegar
1 green onion, thinly sliced
½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
1 bunch romaine lettuce
1 8-ounce can water chestnuts, thinly sliced
½ cup cooked, crumbled bacon
3 hard cooked eggs, peeled and chopped

Combine first six ingredients in a small bowl, mix well, set aside. Wash romaine lettuce, tear and place in a salad bowl. Add water chestnuts, bacon and egg. Pour dressing over salad mixture and toss until well mixed. Serves 8.

ORANGE WAFER COOKIES

3 tablespoons plus 1 teaspoon unsalted margarine
3 tablespoons granulated sugar
2 tablespoons orange juice
1/8 teaspoon vanilla extract
¾ cup cake flour
1 egg white
¼ teaspoon freshly grated orange peel

Preheat oven to 400 °F. In small mixing bowl, using electric mixer, cream margarine with sugar until light and fluffy; add juice and extract and beat until combined. Add flour and beat until batter is smooth.

In separate bowl, using clean, dry beaters, beat egg white until stiff but not dry; gradually fold beaten white into batter. Drop batter by tablespoonfuls onto nonstick cookie sheet, forming 8 cookies; sprinkle each cookie with an equal amount of orange peel and bake until edges are lightly browned, 10 to 12 minutes. Remove cookies to a wire rack to cool.

Warm milk. Beat 3 egg yolks until yellow. Add cornstarch and sugar to milk. Cook until thick. Add extracts. Beat together egg whites and 3 teaspoons sugar. Sprinkle coconut on top. Brown in oven at 425° F.

ANSWER - Joyce Rex, Slatington, requested a recipe for Mocha Cake. Thanks go to Mrs. Kitty Wagner, Elizabethtown, for her recipe that features icing made with instant coffee; and to Eva Southard, Glen Rock, for her recipe that calls for 1 cup strong coffee in the cake batter.

Mocha Cream Cake

4 squares baking chocolate (unsweetened)
½ cup water
½ cup sugar
2 cups flour (presifted)
1 teaspoon baking soda
1 teaspoon salt
½ cup butter
1¼ cups sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
3 eggs
⅔ cup milk

In double boiler combine chocolate and hot water. Stir constantly to melt chocolate. Add ½ cup sugar; cook, stirring 2 minutes. Remove and cool to lukewarm.

In large mixing bowl, beat butter until fluffy. Gradually beat in 1¼ cups sugar. Beat till light, about 5 minutes. Add vanilla. Add eggs one at a time. Beat well after each. Add flour, baking soda and salt, alternating with milk. Beat just to blend. Add chocolate mixture and blend. Pour into 2 9-inch greased round cake pans. Bake at 350° F. about 25 minutes. Cool 10 minutes. Remove from pans.

Mocha Frosting

In medium bowl, combine 3 cups heavy cream, chilled, 1½ cups 10X sugar, ½ cup cocoa, 1/8 teaspoon salt, and 2 teaspoons instant coffee. Refrigerate, covered for ½ hour. Beat until stiff. Split each cake in half so you have 4 layers. Fill and frost cake with frosting.

Chocolate Mocha Cake

2 cups water
2 eggs
1 teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon baking powder
2 cups flour
½ cup Crisco oil
½ cup cocoa
½ cup boiling water
1 cup strong coffee
½ teaspoon salt

mix cocoa, boiling water and soda; set aside to cool. Cream together sugar and oil. Add eggs and mix well. Mix 1 heaping teaspoon instant coffee to ½ cup boiling water, then add ½ cup cold water. Add ½ of coffee to sugar mixture. Then add the flour mixture (flour, baking powder and salt) and beat well. Add remaining coffee, then add the cocoa. Bake at 350° F. for 30 minutes.

MIXED VEGETABLE SAUTE

1 tablespoon margarine
1 tablespoon vegetable oil
1 garlic clove, minced
4 cups diagonally-sliced asparagus (1½-inch long pieces), blanched
2 cups diagonally-sliced carrots, thin slices, blanched
2 cups frozen pearl onions, thawed
1 teaspoon salt
1/8 teaspoon ground nutmeg
Dash ground cinnamon

In 12-inch nonstick skillet, melt margarine; add oil and heat. Add garlic and saute until golden. Add vegetables and saute until tender-crisp; sprinkle with seasonings and stir to combine. Cook for 1 minute longer and serve hot.

CABBAGE-APPLE SLAW

2 small Red Delicious apples, cored and cut into bite-size pieces
2 teaspoons lemon juice
¼ cup sliced scallions
2 tablespoons plain low-fat yogurt
1 tablespoon plus 1 teaspoon mayonnaise
2 teaspoons white vinegar
1 teaspoon salt
1/8 teaspoon each ground celery seed and white pepper
8 cups shredded green cabbage

In large bowl, toss apples with lemon juice; add remaining ingredients, except cabbage, and combine thoroughly. Add cabbage, tossing to coat with dressing; cover and refrigerate until chilled, at least 1 hour. Toss again just before serving.

CARMEL ORANGES

8 small oranges
2 tablespoons plus 2 teaspoons granulated sugar
1 tablespoon water

Peel and slice oranges, reserving rind; cut each slice in half and set aside. Remove pith from orange rind and cut rind into 1 x 1/8-inch strips; measure 2 tablespoons and reserve.

In 1-quart nonstick saucepan, combine sugar and water and cook over medium-high heat, stirring constantly, until mixture turns brown and syrupy — be careful not to burn. Add oranges and reserved strips of rind and stir to coat; transfer to serving bowl or individual dessert dishes.

Ida's Notebook

Ida Risser

After breakfast in the Kona Vernada room, our tour members had a group picture taken with banana trees and coconut palms as a background.

Our one hour trip on the glass-bottom boat was quite interesting. A diver went down to feed the fish and therefore attracted them to the boat. We saw fish with names like yellow tang, parrot, long nose, racoon, orange shoulder, four spot and clown. Some of our group had their pictures taken wearing grass skirts, leis and a straw hat. The water varies from 71 degrees to 80 degrees on the surface. They jokingly told us to "spend all your money and keep Hawaii green."

As we finally had an afternoon free, I decided to spend it at the hotel pool. I'm afraid that I overdid the sun bathing as I've been peeling quite a bit, but I did get the tan that I wanted.

In the evening our group and several hundred other folks attended an indoor luau. Since it started to rain, we missed the imu ceremony and didn't see them remove the pig from the underground pit where it was baked on hot stones. We had Hawaiian dinner buffet with another Polynesian Show afterward to entertain us.

Before we boarded the Aloha Airline plane for the flight back to Honolulu, I had my favorite breakfast of Belgium waffles and blueberries. We had a long flight of 2,500 miles ahead of use as we flew over the Pacific to Los Angeles at some 37,000 feet. It was after 8 p.m. when we got to California and I decided to phone my daughter in Seattle and try my AT&T credit card. She was busy preparing yet another lecture for the class that she teaches at the University of Washington.

Our DC-10 flew east all night over the United States and we landed at the Philadelphia Airport about 5:30 a.m. We found our cases of pineapples and papayas waiting for us as they came through with the luggage. The van from the Lancaster Limousine Service was waiting to take us home.

It was a never-to-be forgotten trip!

Helpful hints for storing Easter eggs

MEDIA — How long can hard-cooked eggs be safely stored in the refrigerator? If hard-cooked eggs are discolored, should they be eaten? What should be done with eggs that crack while being hard-cooked? These are some of the questions consumers frequently ask about hard-cooked eggs, especially at Easter. To get the most value out of hard-cooked eggs, here are some helpful consumer hints:

- When properly refrigerated, hard cooked eggs will last for over a month.
- If the eggs have a green discoloration between the yolk and the egg white, don't despair. They are still perfectly edible. The discoloration is caused by a chemical reaction during cooking between the sulfur in the white and the iron in the yolk. While unattractive, it's harmless.
- Eggs that crack while being hardcooked are still good. They should be used within one-to-two days, however, or they may dry out.
- All hard-cooked eggs should be refrigerated until ready for use, either in the shell or out. If the shells are removed, store the eggs in a tightly closed container or place them in plastic wrap to preserve freshness.
- If raw and hard-cooked eggs become mixed in the refrigerator, try spinning them to discover which is which. Cooked eggs will spin, raw eggs will not. Why? The raw egg yolk is much heavier than the egg white so the egg is unbalanced. But when the egg is hard-cooked, the yolk and egg white are the same density, so the egg spins easily.

Clean, graded eggs that have sound, unbroken or uncracked shells are the best choice for hard cooking. The USDA grade shield on the carton means the eggs have been certified for quality under USDA supervision, are of the specified quality grade and were packed in a plant that meets USDA's rigid sanitary requirements.

Pollen: the breath of life

WASHINGTON — To the 15 million Americans who suffer through the seasonal agonies of hay fever, pollen is unquestionably something to be sneezed at.

But the tiny grains that torment one out of 14 citizens, who in 1975 spent $2 million on hospital care, $224 million in doctors' bills, and $297 million on drugs, are a blessing, not a bane, to most people.

"Pollen is to plants what sperm is to animals: the agent of viability," writes Cathy Newman in the October National Geographic. "It is the breath of life as well as of sneezes."

Allergic or not, there's almost no way for you to escape it. Various hay-fever cures are being studied but none has yet been found.

NO PLACE TO HIDE

And hiding places have all but disappeared. Even Arizona, once a haven for the afflicted, has lost that advantage, largely because of the introduction of non-native plants that have sent the pollen count soaring about tenfold in two decades.

"If you don't mind penguins, you can always go to Antarctica," suggests Dr. Max Samter, senior allergy and immunology consultant at Grant Hospital in Chicago.

Newman's reporting on pollen took her far beyond the wheezes and sneezes of hay-fever sufferers: to a murder in Vienna, to a Navajo medicine man's hogan in Arizona, to a Paris laboratory, to a Texas oil field, to an athletic field in Finland.

In Vienna, the only clue in a 1959 murder was a pair of leather boots belonging to the suspect. Less than a gram of dirt clung to the carefully cleaned boots. A pollen expert–called a palynologist–found 1,200 grains of pollen in the dirt.

The pollen pinpointed the location of the murder and contradicted the suspect's story. Confronted with the evidence, he confessed and led officers to the buried body.

In the Navajo hogan, Fred Stevens Jr., a medicine man in Chinle, Ariz., told Newman: "Corn pollen is a true thing. It is our life. When a child is born, we feed it pollen, and it is in his spirit the rest of his life. At weddings it blesses the young couple. And when a man is dying, pollen is put on him too."

Pueblo and Apache Indian tribes of the Southwest use the sacred substance in various ceremonies, from puberty rites to special dances to healing rituals. The Navajo owner of a new pickup truck, Newman was told, even sprinkled pollen on the tires to bless it.

GRIEVING CAVEMEN

In Paris, palynologists examined grains of pollen, which survives the ages, from a 50,000-year-old grave site of a Neanderthal man in Shanidar Cave, Iraq. The scientists concluded that neither animals nor wind could have carried the pollen so far back in the cave, but that mourners had left flowers.

"The tiniest of clues had revealed a new dimension of cave-dwelling Neanderthal man," Newman writes. "He grieved."

In the Texas oilfields, the industry uses palynology to help determine where and how deep to drill. Fossil pollens serve as a geological dipstick for prospective exploration.

"It's detective work on the grandest scale," says Lew Stover, a senior research associate in Exxon's Houston offices. "People regard oil exploration as static. It's not. Think of mountains uplifting, seas drying up, plants evolving. What could be more grand?"

On the Finnish track, Seppo Nuuttila extols the value of pollen supplements for the Olympic

Panoramic Easter eggs make a quick holiday project

BY SALLY BAIR
Staff Correspondent

LANCASTER – This Easter egg is not just beautiful to look at; it's also good enough to eat. A panoramic egg, with its captivating scene inside, is an attractive addition to any home during the Easter season.

Although the finished product looks complicated and intricate, the entire project can be done in under two hours, start to finish.

Nancy Fasolt, owner of the Cake and Kandy Emporium, Neffsville, taught participants at the Farm and Home Center the fine points of making these interesting creations.

The recipe for the sugar egg is: 2 cups granulated sugar, 3 teaspoons water, 3 teaspoons meringue powder and food coloring to tint. Mix the sugar and meringue powder well with hands or a spoon. Add the food coloring and water and mix it completely.

Once this is mixed, it should be kept in an airtight container, because it will dry out quickly if exposed to air, Nancy cautions.

A plastic egg mold is one requirement for making this attractive egg. The molds come in two pieces, and each piece must be packed with the sugar mixture so there are no spaces or cracks. Once filled, the egg should be leveled off, then turned and tapped out onto a piece of cardboard.

At this point the egg can be air dried, a process which takes about five hours, depending upon the humidity. It can also be dried in the oven at 200 degrees, keeping the molded material on the cardboard. Nancy said a small mold takes seven minutes in the oven, a medium mold takes nine minutes and a large mold takes 12 minutes. Timing, she said, is "pretty important."

Before it goes into the oven the window must be cut out of the side or the end, depending upon your choice of eggs. "The window must be cut off opposite sides so they will be on the same side when the egg is turned over and is ready to use," Nancy explains.

When the time is up, the egg is removed from the oven and scooped out, using a regular teaspoon. Nancy describes the consistency of the inner part of the egg as "sand," and says the soft center mixture can be reused if there are no hard parts in it. This inner part should be removed so the shell is about ½ inch thick. A teaspoon or paring knife can be used to make the opening where the window will be.

Once the center is scooped out, it is time to decorate. Nancy suggests using royal icing. The recipe for royal icing is: 1 pound confectioners sugar, 3 level tablespoons meringue powder, and 6 tablespoons warm water. This must be beaten for 5 minutes.

Once mixed it can be stored in an airtight container, with no refrigeration. It can be rebeaten before being used.

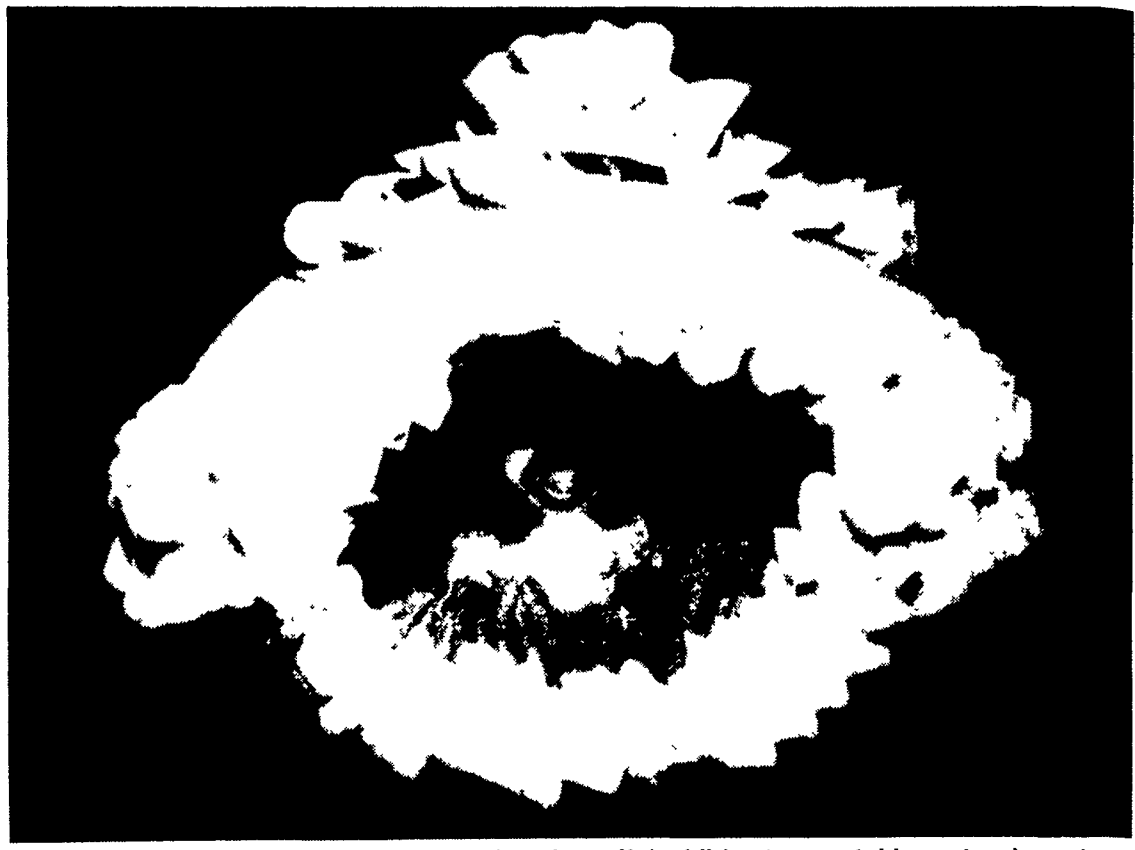
The inside is decorated first, using a grass decorator tip to make grass for the scene. After making the "grass" any small plastic duck, kitten, chicken or other animal can be placed in the grass and flowers can be added with other decorator tips. The royal icing is used to cement the two egg halves together, and then an icing ruffle is made to seal the two sides. With the two sides firmly implanted in place, it is time to add some flowers and leaves on the top.

Nancy points out that this project does not require advanced cake decorating skills. Any combination of tips or purchased tiny flowers may be used.

Once the egg is sealed, it makes a lovely holiday decoration for the table or elsewhere in the home. Packaging them in an attractive "window box" creates the perfect gift. And, Nancy reminds, it is perfectly edible.

The egg can be stored if you can't bear to eat your handiwork, but it shouldn't be stored in plastic until after the first year or it might draw unwanted moisture.

There's still time to make this egg to include in your Easter fun.



The finished panoramic egg would be a beautiful addition to your table centerpiece at Easter. Note the intricate decorations placed inside the egg before the two halves are cemented together with royal icing. It is royal icing which forms the ruffle around the middle, firmly sealing the two halves into one sturdy project.

To make space for the view in the panoramic egg, the soft inner part of the mixture must be carefully scooped out, avoiding a break or other damage. The soft center portion can be re-used in making another eggs.

Storytelling Returns

Recently I received our semi-annual bulletin of the Overholser-Family Association. Although there are many ways to spell the Overholser name, several hundred of us are joined together through common ancestry. The newsletter reported members of the association in 44 states and four foreign countries.

The portion of the "Bulletin" that particularly caught my eye was the request for the tales of and about our ancestors. Not only is the geneology of the family being traced, but also interesting tales of the family members.

Ironically, at a recent in-service training program, the value of story telling in families was highlighted. I'm impressed with the fact that storytelling has been with us for years and has stood the test of time. Mostly told by word of mouth, stories exist for us today as entertainment, a means to educate, and a way to transmit culture from generation to generation.

History and family geneology come alive when tales are put with names and dates. Stories about my great grandfather going fox hunting and relatives helping with the butchering and thrasing gives life to the family members that I've met only through pictures.

Storytelling is really a great way to strengthen and celebrate the family. It is something that everyone can participate in...everyone has a family story they can relate and relive. Over the years, popular interest in storytelling has faded because of people's mobility, the desire to "let go" of an old country heritage, and the invention of the TV.

However, stories are still a valuable family strength-building resource for us and our culture today. The Chippawa-Cree Indian nation in Saskatchewan, Canada, has its own resident storyteller. Often referred to as "keeper of the talking sticks," this man's tribal position is to transmit culture and educate the present generation. The value and importance of this spoken history of his people is so important that he does not allow anyone to record his stories. He and his people believe that the "magic" or power of the story is lost when it's recorded.

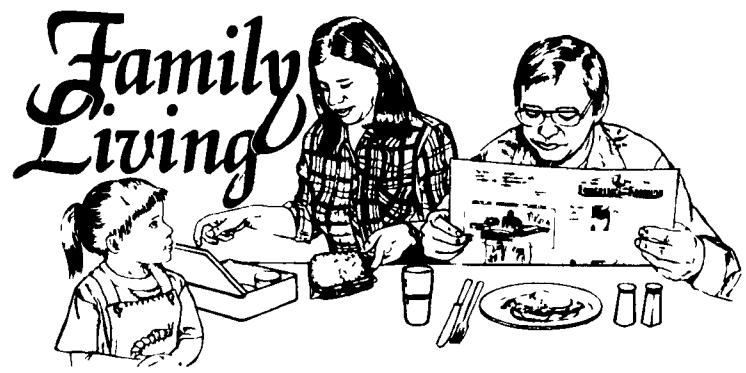
I think that storytelling really is valuable to today's families as well. As our family gathers together over the Easter holiday, I'm sure we will continue to pass along our family heritage through stories. Since childhood I've enjoyed the retelling of stories about my mother dropping all the eggs in the hen house, my dad and uncle's antics with the outhouse, and my grandmother's years as a school teacher. My grandparents are great sources of stories. Instead of starting stories with, "once upon a time," my grandfather brings real life to stories with the saying, "Do you mind (remember) when...?"

Try including storytelling as one of your family strength activities. Maybe you want to start with family happenings. On individual slips of paper, have family members write such things as: the funniest thing that ever happened, the most embarrassing, etc. Then share your stories.

Or you might try collecting some of your family history. Assign family members to talk to an older family or community member and collect a story concerning the "old days." Or start preserving your family's histories and personalities by collecting "oral autobiographies" of family members and friends. The next time your family is together, take the time to pass on interesting, funny, sad, or informative stories about your family.

For more ways to strengthen your family through stories, contact the Extension office for the new series, "Celebrate your Family Through Stories." This series provides many fun family activities that are based on storytelling.

Celebrating your family through stories is dedicated to your family's past, present and future. In sharing family stories we communicate beliefs, attitudes, feelings, customs, and traditions among generations. Telling family stories is a good way to gain an appreciation of the past, pride in the present family, and a rich legacy for the future.



Sneezing, wheezing, nose-twitching misery of hay fever is allegedly thwarted by a moonwalker-style device called a Hincherton Hayfever Helmet, worn here by Jim Greenbaum as he mows his lawn in Virginia. About 15 million Americans suffer from the seasonal affliction, for which a cure has yet to be discovered. But at the same time, infinite grains of pollen make life possible for most plants and trees.

Pollen

athletes that he coached to two gold medals in 1972 and 1976.

But pollen tablets and other products have their detractors as well as their advocates. "I think it's a scandal," says Dr. Walter Lewis, professor of biology at Washington University in St. Louis. "I see nothing in pollen that is not in most plant cells from a nutritional point of view."

ENRICHING DIETS

There's no denying that without pollen menus would be vastly restricted. More than a quarter of a million plants reproduce through pollination. Without them, supermarket shelves would be limited to plants that reproduce asexually, such as potatoes, onions, and bananas.

Pollen can be used externally as well as internally. In beauty salons, it's painted on women's faces as therapy against wrinkles.

And it's found its way into the art world. Wolfgang Laib, an internationally recognized West German artist, shapes patterns from pollen on the floor. When an exhibit ends, he sweeps his temporary work into a jar.

"The impermanence of my art doesn't matter," he says. "The important thing is that pollen is eternal. It is the center of life."

Berks women hear beauty message at annual Ladies Day Out

Pat Pugliese, product concept consultant at the Xienta Institute in Bernville, provided a slide presentation and cosmetic discussion for the 140 women at the annual day off from the farm.

BY ROBIN PHILLIPS
Staff Correspondent

READING—"Health is feeling good about yourself," stated Pat Pugliese, "Be good to yourself." Speaking to over 130 women on proper care of the skin at last week's Berks County Farmers Association's annual Ladies Day Out, Pugliese encouraged women to brighten their outlook on life by caring for something that will make them feel better about themselves.

"If you just look for it," she said, "there is something uniquely beautiful about you." She told the ladies, "Everbody has something. You must just find it."

Pugliese works as a product concept consultant, at the Xienta Institute for Skin Research, founded by her father, Peter T. Pugliese, M.D., president. Located in Bernville along Rt. 183, the institute tests products for the major sales company houses in order for them to substantiate advertising claims about the cosmetic products. "Our basic function is to make people feel better about themselves," Pugliese continued. "Cosmetics is one small way to do it."

"There are a lot of misconceptions about cosmetics," she said. Also, she added, there are many ingredients in current cosmetics that can be harmful to skin. Labels and uses of each product should be thoroughly checked.

Harmful ingredients to avoid in cosmetics include mineral oil, heavy greases or petroleum, and soaps. "Bad news to skin," she added, "is smoking, drinking, and sunning."

"With what we know about skin now," she continued, "there is no reason to look any older than you want to." She encouraged everyone to use a sunscreen at all times. "Ultraviolet rays can cause damage," she stated. "Use a sunscreen (coded by strength) between eight and 15, especially on the face."

Ultraviolet rays, unavoidable whether sunbathing or not, cause premature age spots, darkening of the skin, and wrinkling.

According to the researcher, moisturizing the skin is encouraged "whenever you get wet." Climate changes are also very damaging to the skin.

To prevent premature drying and wrinkling, Pugliese advised vitamin E oil or drops. "This (vitamin E) is becoming well known as a good agent," she said. Dabs at the corners of the eyes, and on dry areas of the face can be very beneficial to a younger appearance, according to Pugliese. "Don't stop smiling, just start moisturizing," she continued.

"Women want their routines to be quick, easy and inexpensive," she stated as she addressed the farm women. "The cleansing routine at night is worth it," she stated. "What you wash your face with is very important."

She cited four steps to use: 1. Get the dirt off; 2. Get the soap off; 3. Use a toner or refresher; 4. Use a moisturizer.

Use products with a normalized pH, said Pugliese. She cautioned the women to avoid products with high pH, which tend to dry the skin, and low pH, which also cause damage.

At the Xienta Institute, they concentrate on research, skin care, and cosmetics, Pugliese reiterated. All studies are done on human subjects with the exception of some research conducted with hairless mice. "The skin will not wear out," she stated. "Our purpose is to make it more comfortable and to look better."

Other hints she passed along to the women, as well as an invitation to visit the center, were to use hand creme with silicone in it for cracked, dry hands, and also to use aloe. Aloe is a good ingredient, according to Pugliese, but many products do not contain enough aloe to do any good.

"Buy an aloe plant," she said. "Aloe is very effective on burns." She also cautioned against using alcohol or products with alcohol on the face.

"You can't change the whole world," she concluded, "but you can make little changes. Be good to yourself."

Lillian Harnish, chairwoman of the Berks women's committee, served as the master of ceremonies for the day. "One of our big projects is legislation," she said as she briefly reported on the women's committee's work for the PFA. "There is so much to be done. We're trying to get laws which will help the farmer."

Complying with the state's request to "get safety conscious," Harnish reported that several members of the committee will be checking with area farmers about the safety shields on their equipment. "Is your PTO covered? Are the shields on your tractors?" she asked the women.

John A. Koch, Berks County Farmers Association president, was also present to comment on current activities of the association. Other guests included Andrew Yorgey, 1984 Youth Conference representative, and Dottie Bartell, regional women's committee chairwoman. The Ag in the Classroom coordinator for Berks Count, Anne Duncan, also reported on activities.

Entertainment for the afternoon after the buffet luncheon included the Muhlenberg High School Concert Choir and a surprise fashion show of current farm fashions. Many door prizes concluded the refreshing "day out" for the farm women as they followed the theme for the day, "Look Alive in '85."

At a surprise fashion show, ladies were treated to some innovative farm fashions by members of the women's committee. Here Joan Hafer models an outfit complete with "feed bag" and carrots that can be worn when feeding the stock.

Berks Society 6

Berks Society 6 met on March 19 in the Oley home of Mrs. Paul Youse. Jack Holcomb showed slides and talked about birds.

Four members attended the 20th anniversary party for Society 5. The group will be taking a bus trip to Peddlar's Village on May 5.

The treasurer's book was audited by Joyce Mast and Marge Fisher and found to be correct.

Members agreed to give $50 each to the senior with the highest achivement in home economics and vocational agriculture at the Oley Valley High School.

The next meeting will be April 16 at 8 p.m. in the R4 Boyertown home of Mrs. David Hauseman.

Office of Aging provides senior citizens with nutritious lunches

BY SALLY BAIR
Staff Correspondent

LANCASTER — National Nutrition Month in March highlighted the importance of a well-balanced diet for good health, and the elderly are one group that has special nutrition needs.

Over 500 senior citizens in Lancaster County enjoy a noontime meal at one of the eight centers operated by the Office of the Aging throughout the county. These meals, nutritionally sound and attractively presented, are prepared five days a week, 52 weeks a year in the kitchens of Conestoga View.

According to Susan Doyle, nutrition consultant for the Office of the Aging, the meals are designed to provide one-third of the total daily allowance and are written to meet the suggested dietary guidelines, including reduced sodium content, reduced total fat and saturated fat, along with adequate amounts of fiber.

She says the challenge of devising menus for the elderly is in meeting their nutrient requirements with fewer calories. "We must be much more careful to get nutrition packed into fewer calories. Nutrition is a very important aspect of overall good health."

As you grow older, she points out that there is a 10 percent reduction in needed calories, with females from age 51-75 needing just 1400-2000 calories daily.

Studies have shown that the elderly are likely to be low in Vitamins C and A, so a Vitamin C source is included in the menu daily, and Vitamin A sources are included several times weekly.

Meeting the calcium requirements is extremely important to the elderly, and studies are now showing that all women over 40 must be careful to get enough calcium. Because of this need, milk is offered at each meal. Doyle says, "They need milk now as much, or more so, than at any other time of their lives." With a laugh, she says the cliche is true, "You never outgrow your need for milk."

Preparation of the meals begins, by necessity, early in the morning, about 5:30 a.m. By 8:30 they are ready to be packaged into insulated containers and trucked around the county.

This requires some special considerations in the preparation. Joseph Simora, food service director at Conestoga View, points out that all food is checked before it leaves Conestoga View. Hot foods must be at 180 degrees to guarantee safety upon arrival at the centers. These foods are checked once again at the centers, and cannot be served if they are below 140 degrees. The super-insulated containers really do the job, however, and hot foods are steaming when they are finally opened for serving at noon in the centers.

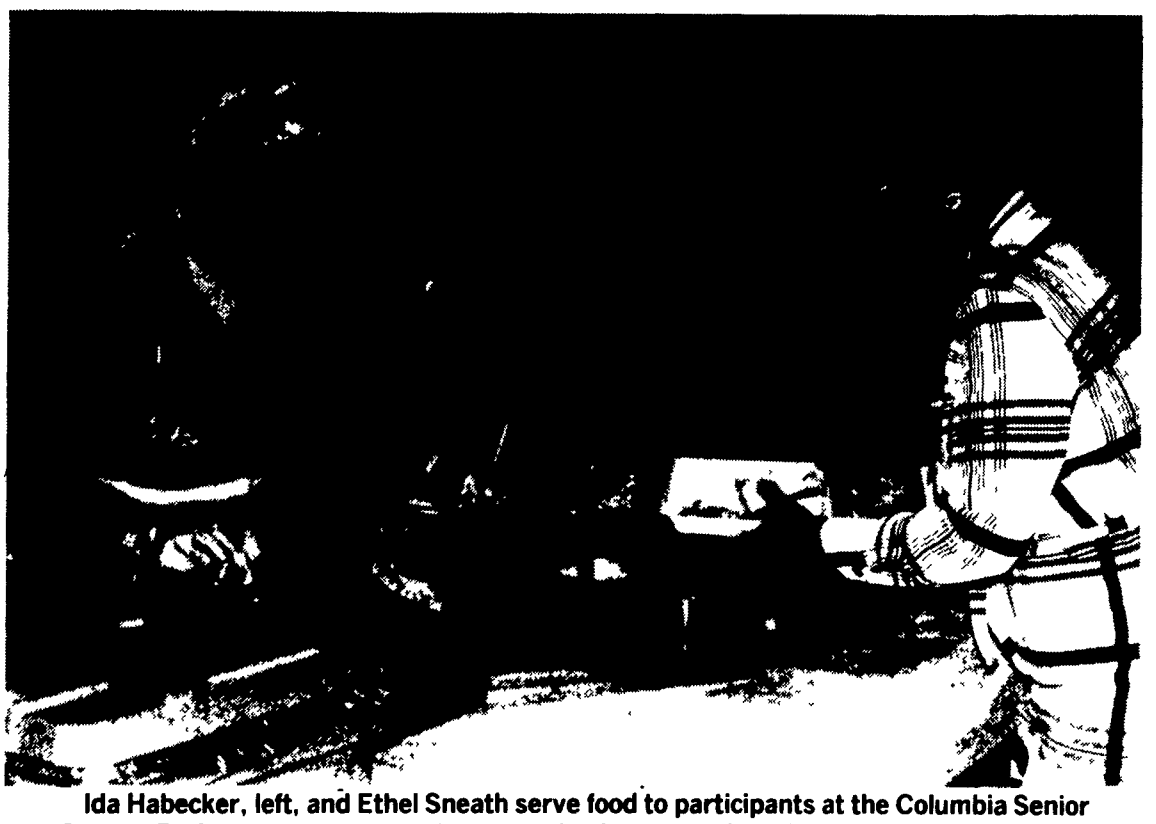
Richard Wolf Jr., a Conestoga View employee, transport a portion of the insulated containers to the loading areas where they will be put on vans.

John Trimble is one of three drivers who transport the prepared meals from Conestoga View to the seven senior centers around the county. Here he packs the food in the back of a van, making sure the insulated containers are secure.



Ida Habecker, left, and Ethel Sneath serve food to participants at the Columbia Senior Center. Both women are part of a team of volunteers who take turns serving the food prepared by Conestoga View.

Although the food is shipped in bulk containers, teams of volunteers at the centers serve the food, usually on divided plastic trays. Reservations for meals must be made one day ahead, although walk-ins are accommodated if there is food left after all the reserved meals have been served. Seconds are offered if there is extra food.

Menus are planned on a five-week cycle which is repeated three times. Susan explains that there are seasonal allowances made to take advantage of fresh fruits and vegetables. She noted that all menus are approved by a dietician and by the state. Lancaster County chooses to have 100 percent monetary reimbursement from state and federal agencies rather than food commodities, which makes menu planning easier.

The cafeteria at Conestoga View is a busy place because, in addition to the meals that go to the centers, preparation goes on all day for the three meals served to the 440 residents of Conestoga View. In addition, Simora oversees the operation of the cafeteria which serves the 120 staff members. The kitchen staff also prepares about 20 meals for Barnes Hall, and operates the snack bar for visitors and employees.

To do all this food preparation there are about 47 full-time equivalent employees.

Although certain items do not transport as well as others, Simora says they constantly try to come up with new menu items to keep the food interesting.

Commentsd from the centers are used in preparing menus, taking into account likes and dislikes. Generally, however, the attitudes have been favorable, Doyle says.

An innovation has been to offer a special meal monthly. Doyle explains that this may be an ethnic meal, such as Jewish, German or French. Often the center managers will plan other programs around the meal to make it more special.

The one center which does its own cooking is the Spanish American Civic Association. Doyle plans the menus, to be sure they are meeting the proper requirements, but they reflect the tastes of the large Spanish population that meets there.

In order to meet the needs of all center visitors, Conestoga View does provide special diet meals, including diabetic, no-added salt and low cholesterol, low fat meals. Another service is providing an emergency food box once a month for each participant from November through March so that in case of bad weather they will have a good meal. All foods in the box are non-perishable, but nutritionally sound.

All meals are provided at no cost to the participants, but according to Pat Mann, senior center program supervisor, many wish to contribute something. For this reason, there is usually a donation can at each center, and participants donate what they like. This money is then used for other items in the budget, as decided by center participants. Mann said last year they got $35,000 in donations from the eight centers.

To be eligible to participate in senior center activities, a resident must be 60 years or older or be married to someone sixty years or older. In certain cases transportation is available through LISTS for those who are handicapped or do not have access to public transportation.

Mann pointed out that the centers are located in areas where there are large populations of elderly and of elderly with low incomes. Most of the centers are located in churches. There are centers in Columbia, New Holland, Lititz, Mount Joy, Quarryville and at the YMCA in Lancaster and at Rockland Street in Lancaster.

Mann says they do regular participant satisfaction surveys, and the primary reason given for participation is companionship and sociability. "That is the prime reason they come," Mann says. She says center managers offer varied programs, ranging from musical, to health to films. Programs are announced in advance.

As part of her work, Doyle visits centers and presents nutrition education programs. "I try to make them aware of their total nutritional needs and to help them improve eating habits."

The Senior Center food program is offering not just a nutritious meal, but also a caring atmosphere. Along with the activities offered daily, participants never need to feel lonely, and five days a week can count on a carefully prepared meal.

Young farm employees need safety training

NEWARK, Del. – How many farm accidents, disabling injuries and even needless fatalities could be prevented if more farmers provided safety training for their employees? University of Delaware extension safety specialist Ron Jester, reflecting on agriculture's comparatively poor accident record, believes that a significant percentage could be avoided. "Countless stories and studies conclude that safety training is effective in preventing accidents," he says.

"Safety isn't a liability that slows you down," says Jester. "It's an asset that speeds up progress." Unfortunately, this perspective on safety often comes about after an accident or a near miss. The important thing is that safety receive a higher priority on the farm. Accident prevention should be a major management goal. Safety training must take place regularly.

Federal child labor laws require training of 14- and 15-year-olds who are employed in a number of hazardous farm jobs. These laws don't include youths working for their parents or guardians, or those over 16, but the need to train those not covered by the law is apparent. Jester cites a study by the National Safety Council which shows that workers under 24 years of age suffer a disproportionate number of severe and fatal accidents for their representation in the work force and exposure to hazards. All the evidence points to the need for safety training of farm employees, especially younger ones.

"Looking back on my teenage years on a farm operating machines, logging, maintaining buildings, running irrigation systems, and much more," Jester reflects, "I realize how little safety training we got. And most of that was pretty superficial."

The same situation exists today, especially on many family operated farms. An employee's or family member's skill and previous knowledge are often taken for granted. "But the risks are too high to do so," the specialist says. "Make sure the workers on your farm are doing the work properly and safely, and always provide training when new equipment or a new process is involved."

Safety training is of value in any farm operation, regardless of how many people are employed. Accident prevention is even more important in small operations because a disabling injury affects a larger percentage of the work force.

Training isn't a panacea, Jester cautions. It won't eliminate all accidents. It can't take the place of improved safety practices. There is no substitute for having guards on equipment, installing effective ventilation systems, putting a roll-over protective structure on your tractor, keeping tools in safe condition and using personal protective equipment. Eliminiating or minimizing hazards is as important as training workers to do their jobs safely.

Another important aspect of safety is monitoring, Jester adds. Periodically check to be sure employees are performing tasks according to the training they received. Monitoring and enforcement encourage employees to adhere to safe practices.

"Why not follow industry's example and put safety training to work on your farm?" asks Jester. "Take the opportunity to make sure people who work for you understand safe practices and emergency procedures. It's your opportunity to make farming more productive by reducing accidents."

THE MICRO WAY

LANI BLOOMER

Prepare side dishes ahead for Easter dinner

If you're having company for Easter Dinner, you may want to prepare foods ahead of time so you can enjoy the day along with your family and friends. Your microwave can reheat most casseroles well, if you don't try to hurry things by using high power. On high, the outside of a casserole will get dried out or hard (overcooked) before the center heats, unless you can stir during the reheating time.

When preparing casseroles to be reheated in your microwave, be sure to use a microsafe container. A shallow layer of food will reheat more quickly than a thick block of food. For a deep dish that can't be stirred, use medium power (50,5). Cover casseroles with waxed paper or a lid for more even heating. Refrigerated casseroles may take twice as long as those at room temperature.

If your oven has a temperature probe, put the probe into the center of the casserole. Set the temperature for 160 degrees (serving temperature for food), and set the oven's power level for medium (50,5) or medium high (70,7).

A one-quart casserole will take about 5-6 minutes on medium high (70,7) to reheat. A two quart casserole will reheat in about 10-12 minutes on medium high. Remember, the microwaves heat your food from the outside in to the middle. The edges will be much hotter than the center. Feel the center bottom of the casserole dish to see how hot the middle is. Let a reheated casserole stand for five minutes for the temperature to even out.

Here are recipes for three side dishes that can be made ahead and reheated. If you don't need such a large quantity, freeze the extras for a rainy day, or cut recipes in half and reduce the cooking times.

Risotto is a delicately flavored rice dish from Italy, that is easier to make in your microwave than on the range! Traditional recipes often include saffron as a flavoring; it may be added to this recipe if you want.

Risotto

3½ cups chicken stock or broth, or use water and 4 chicken bouillon cubes

1 teaspoon salt, (use ½ teaspoon if using bouillon cubes)

½ stick butter or margarine

1 large onion, chopped finely

2 cups long grain white rice, not instant

½ cup white wine (or use 4 cups chicken stock and no wine, if you prefer)

1. Heat chicken stock and salt in a 4-cup measure on high for 10-15 minutes, until boiling. Set aside.

2. While stock is heating, chop onion finely, and put in a 2-quart casserole with the butter. Saute onion and butter in microwave for 5-6 minutes on high, stirring once, until onion is tender but not browned.

3. Add rice to onion and stir to coat with butter. Add wine and stir. Microwave on high, uncovered for 3-4 minutes until most of wine is absorbed. (If not using wine, stir rice into onion and skip this step.)

4. Stir in hot chicken stock, cover and heat on high for 5-6 minutes until liquid boils.

5. Reduce power to medium (50,5) and cook for 10-11 minutes until almost all the liquid is absorbed. Stirring is not necessary in the microwave, as it is on the range, for this part of the cooking.

6. Stir in cheese and let stand for 5 minutes before serving. Makes 8 servings.

TIP: To prepare ahead, prepare through step 5. Reheat on high for 8-10 minutes, stirring twice. Stir in cheese and let stand.

Baked Corn

4 eggs

2 tablespoons melted butter or margarine

2 tablespoons sugar

¼ cup flour

2 16-ounce cans cream style corn

½ teaspoon salt

¼ teaspoon pepper

1 12-ounce can evaporated milk

paprika for top, if desired

1. Beat eggs well in a 2-quart microsafe bowl or measure. Add remaining ingredients except paprika, in order, and stir well.

2. Heat, in mixing container, on high for 9 minutes, stirring well every 3 minutes until mixture is very hot and starts to set around the edges. Stir well.

3. Pour into a greased 2-quart round casserole. Sprinkle with paprika, if desired. Microwave, uncovered, on medium high (70,7) for 20-25 minutes, rotating dish halfway through. Center will be soft set, but will firm up after standing 5 minutes. Serves 8 to 10.

Tip: To reheat, microwave refrigerated casserole on high for 5 minutes. Rotate dish, and microwave on medium (50,5) for 15-20 minutes until hot. Exact reheating time on medium will depend on shape and thickness of food layer. Use your temperature probe for easy reheating.

Green Bean Casserole

3 10-ounce packages frozen French style gree beans

½ cup chopped onion

2 tablespoons butter or margarine

3 tablespoons flour

½ teaspoon salt

¼ teaspoon pepper

¾ cup sour cream

½-1 cup shredded cheddar cheese

1. Cook frozen beans (cook right in the cartons) on high for 18-20 minutes, until cooked. Turn the cartons over after 10 minutes. Place beans in a colander to drain.

2. Saute onion and butter in a 2-quart casserole on high for 3-4 minutes, stirring once, until the onions are tender.

3. Mix flour, salt, pepper and sour cream together until smooth. Stir drained beans into onion in casserole, then stir in sour cream mixture.

4. Cover and microwave on high for 5-6 minutes, stirring once, until casserole is hot. Smooth out beans in dish, and sprinkle cheese on top.

5. Microwave, uncovered, on medium (50,5) for 8-10 minutes until bubbly. Serves 8-10.

Tip: To prepare ahead, prepare through step 3 and refrigerate. In step 4, increase time to 8-10 minutes, stirring twice, until beans are hot. Then continue as directed.

Note: the cooking times above are for microwaves with 600-700 watts of power. For 500-600 W, add 10 seconds to each minute; for 400-500 W, add 20 seconds to each minute.

Airville couple honored for 4-H service

BY JOYCE BUPP
Staff Correspondent

YORK — An Airville farm couple who has supported 4-H work, both in Maryland and Pennsylvania, has been cited by the York Agricultural Extension service for their outstanding extension involvement.

The award to Bess and Fred Hutshcenreuter highlighted the extension service's annual banquet, held March 22 at the Wisehaven Hall.

Together, the Hutshcenreuter's have given 44 years of work to the 4-H program, with Bess a volunteer leader for 18 years, and Fred a 26-year 4-H leader veteran.

Bess is the organizational leader for Airville community club with 62 members and 14 leaders. She is a past member of the 4-H Center board of directors and the Extension service executive committee, and presently serves on the family living advisory council and the 4-H advisory committee. A former Maryland Extension home economist and 4-H member, Bess is a key leader in the new 4-H foods and nutrition program and co-organized the 4-H Fabulous Food Fund day several years ago.

Fred serves as leader for the Airville 4-H tractor club and has been the resident square dance caller for 4-H family fun nights and county council's wheelchair dances with the guests at Pleasant Acres. He is also active in the activities of the South Central Pennsylvania Cattlemen's Club and the activities of the state cattlemen's association.

Prior to moving to York County, Fred was the leader of the Glenn Arms Boys 4-H club and also a Maryland 4-H'er. Both are members of the Maryland 4-H All Stars, a promotion and service organization for the Extension youth program.

The Hutshcenreuters have one daughter, Ann, also honored at the extension meeting as a state winner and national 4-H club congress representative in the area of citizenship.

A special presentation from the county 4-H went to the York County commissioners, represented at the meeting by attorney Gordon Roe. Roe accepted the 4-H flag from Tom Beck, Seven Valleys, a state winner in the project area of petroleum power. The flag, originally a gift to Beck at the 4-H congress, had flown over the Chicago Union Oil building. Flags were presented to all state petroleum power winners by Amoco, who sponsored their trip to the national congress in Chicago during November.

Speaker for the annual dinner meeting was Steve Trostle, an alumnus of the York County 4-H program. Trostle is a 1984 graduate of Delaware Valley College, recipient of numerous collegiate awards and presently pursuing graduate studies at Penn State in animal reproduction.

He compared the 4-H program to an automobile, labeling the members the tires which move the vehicle, and turning on enthusiasm and knowledge. Parents are the crankshaft, dedicated to helping 4-H'ers "turn on" to the program without overwhelming the youth with parental over-involvement.

Leaders take the form of the steering mechanism, helping direct the program through sacrifices of their own personal time. Money fuels the machine, with 4-H operated on a combination of governmental funding, private fundraising and individual investment.

Also previewed at the extension meeting was a promotional slide show of the county's 4-H program, with the color slide presentation and accompanying script compiled by the county's 4-H press club. Narrator of the program was Melissa Trostle.

New officers for the extension board were elected during the business session. They are Jed Beshore, New Cumberland, president; Sara Eisenhart, Thomasville, first vice-president; Bill Holloway, York, second vice-president; Vicki Rohrbaugh, Seven Valleys, secretary; and Robert Smyser, York, treasurer.

Fred and Bessie Hutschenreuter, right, are the York Extension Service's outstanding extension involvement winners. Outgoing board president Charles Hess presented the couple with a custom-made commemorative plaque fashioned in the shape of York County.

4-H Therapeutic Riding Club

The leaders of the 4-H Therapeutic Riding Club and community members are sponsoring a 50's dance on April 26 from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. at the Lancaster County Sportsman Association in Holtwood.

All proceeds go toward funding the riding program which works with mentally and physically handicapped children and adults. Riding lessons are given on an eight-week basis by trained personel at the Central Manor Farm.

Tickets are $8 and may be obtained by calling either Donna at 284-3292 or Ellen at 687-8917. The DJ will be Rockin' Roy Probst. Prizes and refreshments will be available.

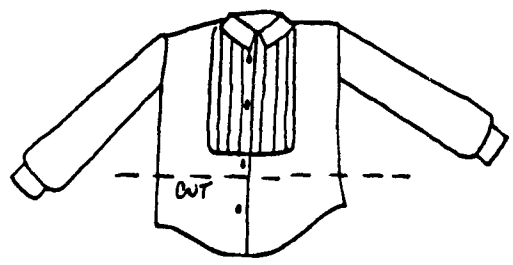
Menswear ... for ladies only

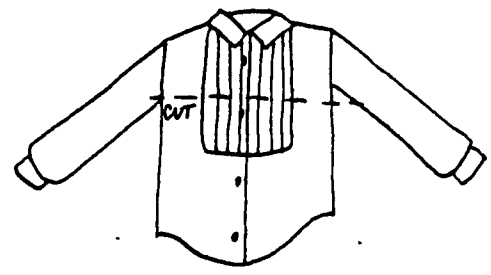
What once were conservative white tuxedo shirts now are trendy shirtdresses styled with bold splashes of Rit Dye color. All you need to be right in style are two white cotton shirts. Take the top ¾ of one shirt and ¾ of the bottom of the other, adjust for length and attach them together at the waist with an elasticized casing.

You don't have to take another stitch because the shirttail becomes the hem. Splatter dye with Rit's Royal Blue, Old Rose and Evening Blue using a paintbrush and your own artistic flair to create a fashionable masterpiece.

SPLATTER-DYED SHIRTDRESS

Use two men's 100 percent cotton tuxedo shirts; cut as shown:





Stitch cut edges together, forming 1 inch seam allowance. Stitch another seam ¼ inch from cut edge. Pull ½ inch-wide elastic through ¾ inch-casing formed (leaving opening in stitching to insert elastic).

Adjust elastic to fit (top half will be blouson-style.)

To Splatter Dye:

Dissolve 1 teaspoon Powder Rit Dye for each color in 1 cup boiling water:

Rit Evening Blue
Rit Royal Blue
Rit Old Rose

Using a ¾ inch-wide nylon bristle brush, dip in colors separately and splatter randomly all over shirtdress. Dry clean after dry to remove excess dye. Wear with solid-color belt that picks up on of the splattered shades.

Option: If desired, attach shoulder pads to inside of shirt to give dress a bolder shape.

Wild horse adoption center to offer training demonstration

LEWISBERRY — Many people have heard about the thousands of wild horses in America's West, but few know that some of the excess horses can be adopted for $125 from a center right here in Pennsylvania. Still the question is, what do you do with a wold horse once you get it home? How do you go about getting your hands on it, and eventually a saddle?

These questions and many more will be answered at a free wild horse training and gentling demonstration to be held April 6 at the Bureau of Land Management's Northeast Adoption Center in Lewisberry, PA.

Randy Ream, a professional horse trainer who has successfully gentled adopted wild horses, will begin the demonstration at 10 a.m. Ream, a resident of York, will demonstrate step-by-step how he gentles wild horses, from the first handling to saddling up. Members of the Echoing Hoofbeats 4-H Club, who have adopted 15 wild horses, will also be at the demonstration to answer questions and provide helpful training tips.

Center operators Frank and Doris Goodlander believe the demonstrations will be very helpful to peole who might be thinking about adoping a wild horse. They agree that the demonstrations give people a chance to come out of their winter dens to enjoy the spring weather and see how well these animals respond to care and attention.

The Goodlanders point out this is a good time to adopt a horse because they have more than 130 animals to choose from, with many pregnant mares; most probably will be with foals by the time of the Easter weekend event.

According to the Goodlanders, many more people are needed to open their hearts and homes to these animals because nearly 17,00 are being rounded-up this year to curtail the overpopulation that will lead to deterioration of their rangeland. "With the recently reduced adoption fee of $125," said Goodlander "this program offers people an economical way to have a very good horse."

The Northeast Wild Horse and Burro Adoption Center is located about half way between York and Harrisburg. For additional information call the Goodlanders at (717) 938-2560.

For earlier blooms outdoors this spring, plant annual flower seeds early indoors. That way they will be ready to set outside by about mid-May after there is no danger of frost. Plants started indoors will bloom much earlier than plants grown from seed outdoors.

Some of the seeds to consider starting inside soon are petunias, snapdragons, ageratum, scabiosa, and verbena. Clay or plastic flower pots, peat pots, peat pellets or seedling flats may be used to start the seeds. Be sure that if the pots were used before, they have been cleaned well to eliminate seedling diseases.

The soil you use should have plenty of humus or organic matter to prevent packing. A mixture of equal parts coarse sand, leaf mold, and good garden soil is usually good for starting seedlings. Or, you may want to use a commercial peat-lite soil mix. Be sure not to add manure or any fertilizer to the soil.

Once you've prepared the soil mixture, fill the pots and gently press down the soil with the base of a water glass. Leave about one-half inch of the inside rim of the pot showing. After the soil has been firmed, you are ready to sow the seeds on the surface of the mixture. The seed packet will tell you how much soil to put over the seeds.

Then gently firm the second layer of soil with the glass. The next step is to water the newly-sown seeds. The easiest method is to submerge each pot almost to the rim in water until moisture shows on the surface of the soil. When the water appears, remove the pots and let them drain. It's a good idea to continue watering the seeds this way since it keeps seedlings from drying out or being washed out of the pot by overhead watering.

A few additional pointers for successfully growing your seedlings — give them plent of light after they germinate — keep them moist — and don't let them get too cold until the weather warms up.

Margaret Schultz crowned Montgomery Co. dairy princess

BY MARTHA GEHRINGER
Staff Correspondent

COLLEGEVILLE — Margaret Schultz, Collegeville, was crowned 1985 Montgomery County Dairy Princess during pageant ceremonies on March 23. Jean Gehringer and Tricia Curtis were named alternate dairy princesses.

Margaret, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Perry Schultz, is a junior at Methacton High School. She plans to attend Delaware Valley College to major in food science. Margaret is a member of the 4-H Beef Club and has served as vice president. She is also a member of the track team and class congress at her high school.

Jean, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paschal Gehringer of Bally, is a freshman at East Stroudsburg University, where she is majoring in health and physical education. Jean is involved in the health club and in intramural sports at college. She is also a teen leader of the Mont-Berks 4-H Dairy Club.

Tricia, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Curtis, Pennsburg, is a junior at Upper Perkiomen High School. She is a member of the marching band and the National Honor Society. Tricia is also the vice-president of the Western Mont-Berks 4-H Dairy Club.

The purpose of the dairy princess program is to promote the sale of milk and milk products to the consumer; to help give consumers and children more information about the need to include milk and milk products in their daily diets; and to build a better relationship between urban and rural people.

Part of the evening's competition required the contestants to perform a skit or speech promoting milk. This enabled the judges to observe the contestants in front of an audience.

The new princess explained the importance of milk for people of all ages in her presentation. Tricia Curtis acted as a judge in the case between milk and soda. After reviewing the case she ruled in favor of milk.

Jean Gehringer announced that she was attending spring training and that she was playing on milk's winning team. She listed the batting order with the components of milk serving as the players.

Judges for this year's contest were Mrs. Nona Breaux, editor of The Reporter, Mrs. Linda Homa, past Montgomery County dairy princess, and Dean Shollenberger, branch manager of Southeast Farm Credit.

Lebanon County 4-H Livestock Club

The Lebanon County 4-H Livestock Club will be accepting new members during March and April. Anyone who has reached their eighth birthday before January 1, 1985 is welcome to join.

This club provides an opportunity for a young person to learn to fed and show a lamb, pig or steer. Also included in the educational program for the year will be information on how to care for the health of the animal, how to fit it for show, and how to select a project animal.

Members of this club also do fun things during the year. Field trips and tours are scheduled. Family activities are planned and members may travel several places for livestock judging events.

The Livestock Club members are very active at the Lebanon Area Fair and assist with the 4-H Barbeque. They also hold a Winter Roundup in December.

Many of the members make a profit from their livestock projects and are able to use that in becoming involved in managing a livestock breeding project.

If this sounds like something you would like to try, please contact Donna McConaughey at 273-0326 or Ken Winebark at 274-2801, Ext. 350.

4-H minorities offered scholarship

YORK — College-bound minority students who belong to 4-H can now apply for a $4,000, four-year scholarship to Penn State.

According to Carroll Howes, interim state 4-H director at the Pennsylvania State University, the new national 4-H scholarship program is targeted to minorities in high school who are planning to pursue a career in agriculture or a closely related field. Ten scholarships will be awarded at $1,000 per year.

To be eligible for the competitive scholarships, candidates must be high school seniors in the fall of 1985; have been 4-H members for at least a year; demonstrate citizenship and leadership skills; have proven academic ability; and have been accepted by the college of agriculture at a land-grant university such as Penn State.

The five-year program is designed to expand the number of minority professionals in the agricultural industry, says Howes. The scholarships are made possible by funding from E.I. duPont de Nemours and Company.

For more information, contact your county Extension office or the 4-H office at the Pennsylvania State University, 405 Ag Administration Building, University Park, PA 16802 (814) 865-6551.

Seed supply for home gardners should be adequate

ITHACA, NY – Although spring may seem light years away, millions of home gardeners across the country have already begun the annual scramble–ordering seeds of their favorite vegetable varieties.

How is the seed supply situation shaping up?

The answer seems to be a mixed bag: the supply for some varieties may be short for commercial growers who use large amounts of seeds. For home gardeners, who generally use small amounts of seeds, the supply may be adequate for most of their favorites, according to a Cornell University vegetable crops specialist.

Roger A. Kline, an expert on home gardening in the New York State College of Agriculture and Life Sciences at Cornell, says that seeds for certain varieties for home garden use are in short supply and, in some cases, not available.

"The seed production in 1984 was less than ideal due to unfavorable growing conditions in seed producing areas of the northwestern part of the United States," Kline reports. The Pacific Northwest produces much of the vegetable seeds used in the Northeast and elsewhere in the nation.

As a result, seeds for a Brussels sprout variety known as "Long Island Improved," a long-time favorite for home garden use in the Northeast, are hard to find this year. Gardeners, however, can use "Prince Marvel" instead and may enjoy it more, Kline suggests.

Also difficult to find is "Marketmore 70," a high-quality slicing cucumber developed earlier at Cornell, Kline says. Replacing this variety is an improved version called "Marketmore 76," also a Cornell variety. This one features strong resistance to several destructive diseases, such as mosaic virus, powdery mildew, and scab.

New this year is "Marketmore 80," yet another Cornell cucumber. It does not develop bitter taste in the fruit, although most cucumber varieties can turn bitter when grown under stressful growing conditions. Developed by Henry Munger, a Cornell plant breeder who created the Marketmore cucumber series, the new, non-bitter cucumber is a major improvement in cucumber quality, Kline notes.

Bitterness comes from a chemical called "cucurbitacin" which normally occurs in the leaves. Under certain conditions, this chemical is found in the fruit thus making it taste bitter. For reasons not well understood, this chemical is highly attractive to the cucumber striped-beetle that spreads wilt-causing bacteria.

"Marketmore 80 has much reduced levels of this chemical, thus it's less attractive to the beetle," Kline says.

Also out of supply is "Superstar" muskmelon, which has been a very popular variety grown in the Northeast by commercial growers as well as home gardeners, Kline reports. Home gardeners, however, should not be discouraged, because seed growers made a second planting immediately after the initial planting failed.

"The seed from this second planting will become available in early April," Kline says. "Therefore, the home gardener should request 'Superstar' then."

Growers of "Butterbean" soybean and "Stampede" sunchoke will have to wait until 1986 for planting stock.

The supply for "Sweet-100" cherry tomato as well as "Staddon Select" pepper is tight. Some of the California-type peppers may be substituted for "Staddon Select," but how well they will perform in the Northeast depends on weather conditions.

"Premium Crop" broccoli and "Bushkin" pumpkin are limited to commercial growers and may run short for gardeners.

Some seed houses now carry "Rosa" potato, an all-purpose spud developed at Cornell; "Sweet Sandwich," a mild storage onion; and "A-plus" carrot that produces twice the amount of carotene normally present in carrots.

"These varieties have been tested in New York for the past few years through hundreds of home gardeners who took part in statewide trials conducted by Cornell Cooperative Extension," Kline says.

Planting a birthday tree would make anyone's birthday a special day. A birthday tree is any kind of tree you feel is appropriate to plant in honor of someone's birthday, wedding, first home or other special event. Here, Megan and Tracy Forman from East Hanover Township plant their tree.

Shop smart to make most of stable food prices

YORK — Rural families can take heart. When all other expenses are eating away at the family budget, supermarket food prices have remained stable. Falling prices, however, shouldn't lead consumers from food-buying strategies that can save money, a Penn State Extension food marketing specialist says.

"Food expenditures have been rising at successively lower rates each year since 1980, and all through the 80s, food prices have been below inflation rates," says Harold Neigh. "There are more substantial living expenses now, such as housing and transportation, that play a bigger role in household costs than food. Health care costs are showing the steepest rise now."

As a result of slower food cost increases, Neigh says, rural families are disbanding food cooperatives that were created when food prices were high. Food canning and freezing, however, have remained popular.

"Rather than going to a food co-op, rural families found they could store their own food more easily. Rural food co-ops have fewer options to buy goods than do the metropolitan family co-ops," he says.

Nevertheless, Neigh suggests radical changes in the way people plan and practice food shopping if they would like to reduce food spending further. Buying habits, he says, are the major obstacles between precise and pretentious shopping.

"When one spends more than one should to buy a car, furniture or appliance, it might take years to correct the mistake," he says. "But people buy food more often. They can change their buying habits more quickly, and costs can be cut more rapidly, if they really want to do it. Patterns build up over the years, so drastic changes are hard."

Planning involves things like keeping a weekly menu in mind, making a list, taking inventory and studying food ads, Neigh says. These steps give a shopper an idea of his purchase and meal construction.

"As I said, it's difficult," he says. "People don't usually shop this way. But if they make a menu and pattern their shopping list from that menu, they can buy just the things they need."

Neigh stresses planning because it eliminates impulse buying - the tendency to buy things that aren't needed but that looked appealing at the time of purchase. Without a planned list, shoppers "forget items, and have to return to the store. That makes them subject to impulse buying again."

Although other food specialists may disagree, Neigh recommends shopping at two stores. If the stores aren't too far apart, he says, the price difference will involve only the shopper's time and gas money.

"It pays because you can pick the specials at both stores," he says. "Stores will change the prices on two or three hundred items in their store to give the impression of cheaper prices. If you know prices in two stores, you can see what items are really not on sale.

Stocking up, Neigh says, is a valuable shopping practice. Families should buy more than one item if it's popular and storable. They can buy to make "planned-overs," or more than one meal out of the same food item. They can also buy food according to its cost per serving, not its price per pounds.

"If you're going to buy more than you need for one week, you should watch for sales and keep inventory. Buy a larger cut of beef, and you can plan to make more than one meal out of it," Neigh reasons.

"By buying more and replenishing your stock, rather than buying for a week's consumption, you have what you need. The more business-like you are in your buying habits, the more efficient you become as a buyer for the family."

Finally, Neigh says, food should be bought according to use. Food is sold with one of three brand labels - - national, private or generic. If your food item will be buried in a casserole or salad, Neigh says, it's not necessary to buy the most expensive brand.

"You don't always have to buy the cheapest, either," he says. "If you know ahead of time what you're preparing, you can choose the right type of brand label. The nutritional quality for all of them is the same.

York dairy youth plan mock sale

YORK — York dairy youth plan to polish their bidding and buying skills with a "Mock Sale," scheduled for April 20, 9 a.m. through 4 p.m. at the county's 4-H Center near Bair.

All interested dairy youth from surrounding counties in the Southcentral 4-H District are invited to attend the seminar. This free, educational program will be divided into workshops on Type Selection, led by Dale Olver of Atlantic Breeders Cooperative, Pedigree Evaluation by Jay Howes and Auctioneering Tips from Mike Weimer, both with the Backus Associates cattle sales firm.

Following these workshops, youth will have the opportunity to evaluate a selection of animals and pedigrees, and the chance to do some actual bidding in a sales ring setting.

A wrap-up of the day will summarize and evaluate the purchases and determine which animals were the best buys.

Participants are asked to bring a packed lunch, with drink and dessert to be provided by the York hosts. Reservations are requested by April 15, and should be made to Mrs. Jane Thompson, R1, Box 229, East Berlin, 17316, or by calling 259-9260.

Fiber is important to balanced diet

NEWARK, Del. — Dietary fiber, or roughage, is the part of food which cannot be broken down by the enzymes in the digestive tract. Therefore, these foods pass through the body undigested. The main sources of dietary fiber are fruits, vegetables and cereal products.

Fiber content of the typical American diet averages between 10 and 30 grams a day. According to University of Delaware extension home economist Debbie Amsden, this is considered adequate.

The fiber content of food is currently not as well described as other nutritional values, she says. One reason is the difficulty of measuring dietary fiber. Also, a given food will vary in the amount of fiber it contains, depending on variety and growing conditions of the crop.

Advertisements and popular articles on nutrition sometimes refer to crude fiber. "This is the residue which remains after treating food in the laboratory with chemicals not identical to those in your digestive tract," Amsden says. "So results of this procedure underestimate the amount of total dietary fiber available from a food."

There are a number of different kinds of food fiber. Bran, one of the better known, is the outer layer of grain. Fiber in the form of pectin, gums and hemicellulose is found in fruits and vegetables.

The amount of fiber in a food is not altered by processing or handling, as in the case of vitamins, the home economist says. "For instance, raw apples, or applesauce made from them, would have the same amount of fiber, but the vitamin content would change due to heating." Canning and freezing do not reduce the available amount of this persistent substance, either.

Research shows that dietary fiber helps relieve constipation by increasing the water content of the feces. Bran is clearly associated with this relief. There is scientific evidence that some kinds of fiber may also reduce serum cholesterol levels. "The relationship is not clear," says Amsden. "However, it is evident that bran does not reduce serum cholesterol levels, although the pectin and gums supplied by fruits may help. As you read recommendations about increasing dietary fiber, you should look for information about the specific type of fiber that brings about the intended results."

Americans are being encouraged to consume more dietary fiber. How can you know if you have enough in your diet? "You are meeting this challenge if you eat a variety of fruits, vegetables and whole grains," says Amsden. "The variety is important because each type of fiber makes a different contribution to the body's functions. One indicator is the comfort, frequency and bulk of bowel movements."

If you feel you need to add fiber to your diet, do so gradually and be prepared to drink more water. Some people experience gas and bloating from the increase, but most do not. Amsden cautions that when eating fiber, it is still important to consume dairy and meat products or other protein sources.

"CLEAN FLOW"
Stakeless Bodies by OMAHA STANDARD

- 52" or 60" heavy gauge sides give you more hauling capacity for grain, sugar beets and other commodities.
- "Clean Flow" design of the extra deep 30° sidewall corrugations allows complete emptying with no sharp corners for grain to hang up
- Greater inside width and length make this an ideal body for hauling bagged or palletized products
- Standard three section full opening rear doors.
- Complete your "Grain Power" package with an Omaha Standard work-proven hoist. Choose from the most complete line of scissor or stabilized "Olympic" telescopic hoists
- Compare any of Omaha Standard's full line of steel, aluminum or wood grain bodies and rugged hoists you'll know why Omaha Standard is the most respected name at work on the farm today

Who's Earning The Dough

As the sweet smell of the outdoors and the freshness of spring beckons us out into the fields, we can quickly let our priorities get out of order.

As dairy farmers and dairy businessmen, we need to keep reminding ourselves that it's the ladies in the barn that are earning the dough.

I can remember two recent farm visits where both dairymen really learned and appreciated what proper attention to good cows can mean to the health of their farm businesses. Both had made remarkable progress with their herds by proper feeding and close attention to those little details that help to keep cows healthy and productive, that keep mastitis under control and that help cows to conceive better.

One farmer mentioned that, "I worry more now than I used to, you know, those cows could drop back on me!" The other dairyman who appreciated what his cows were able to do for him was concerned about how he was going to get his field work done this spring without jeopardizing the herd – and his income.

These two dairymen had some very important concerns that should be pertinent to most other dairymen, especially at this busy time of the year. Where do you owe your allegiance? To the cows or to the crops you are producing for them? It's a dilemma! Both are very important to the health of the business.

It is my opinion that cows deserve top priority, even during busy field work seasons. Your best cow people need to have ample time to spend with the herd. Don't short-change the herd! Remember, everything you do in the field is done for their benefit.

In the same breath, I also point out that good yields and good quality feed are also very important, as I mentioned earlier. If you've been unable to do both jobs well – herd management plus feed production and storage – remember, you can usually purchase good feeds, but it is nearly impossible to purchase good, sustained levels of herd performance.

What does all of this mean? Buy all your feeds? No, I'm not advocating that. But, maybe some of the thoughts which follow will be helpful.

Hire good field labor, and give your best cowman ample time to do his work well in the barn. Or, hire custom operators to do some of the time-consuming, but less critical, jobs in the field.

If good labor and custom services are hard to find, let someone else rent some of your land, and buy the crops back from him – if they are of the right quality.

Cut your operation – herd size and acreage – back to a size you can manage well. It'll probably be more profitable, and more enjoyable, to do a better job with a smaller operation, and work for a larger margin of profit per unit, than to expand beyond your means and perhaps have little to no margin left per unit.

Spring Adjustments

Do your cows drop back in production and test in the spring? Or, maybe production picks up as your cows go out on pasture?

Both situations can indicate problems with the feeding program. If production picks up, chances are, your winter feeding program was out of line. Keep this concern in mind as you produce feeds and as you develop a feed program for next winter.

The other problem of avoiding drops in production and fat is something we can start working on now. A lot of this can be related to inadequate fiber, DM and energy intake.

Lush grass is low in fiber. It's also bulky; cows fill up on it fast, and reduce intake of other feeds. To minimize this problem, be sure cows consume some fibrous forages and energy before being turned out to pasture.

Restrict grazing to shorter periods of time. This will enable you to bring cows back to the barn for additional feedings of grain and other forages. In the process, you may increase total DM intake, and maintain a better, more stable rumen pH.

Many farmers have experienced the benefits of feeding frequently and of blending ration ingredients. Or if they don't blend ration ingredients, they may be dispersing their feedings of grain and forages throughout the day to minimize rumen upsets.

Now that the field work season is upon us, let's not throw out all these good practices that have been working well for us over the winter months.

Farm Co-ops chief urges "Marketing Loan" concept

WASHINGTON – Ben F. Morgan, chairman of the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, today advocated use of "marketing loans" as a vital financial support element of the 1985 Farm Bill.

Morgan, chief executive officer of Dairymen, Inc., Louisville, told members of the Senate Agriculture Committee that farmers should be allowed to repay marketing loans based upon loan rate value or world market level, whichever is less.

He said this would protect farmers while allowing U.S. commodities to move through market channels at competitive prices.

"The marketing loan concept is a new approach which we believe has great promise," Morgan declared. "We strongly support it as a means of enhancing farm income while allowing U.S. products to be competitive in world markets."

The cooperative leader added that an aggressive trade title should be included in the 1985 Farm bill to counter unfair trade practices, build world demand, and compensate for the effects of an overvalued dollar.

Morgan said that legislation should provide for export programs tailored to fit the diverse needs of recipient countries. He suggested that surplus commodities be used as bonus products, and blended with U.S. aid programs to encourage their use. But, he said, such action shouldn't displace any commercial sales which would otherwise have been made.

The NCFC chairman also called for programs designed to move recipient nations from "aid" to "trade" in their relationship with the U.S. He said that new credit programs should include continuous line of credit guarantees, and an intermediate export credit guarantee program.

Morgan advocated extension and improvement of the P.L. 480 (Food for Peace) program, with emphasis on multi-year programming and infastructure development in recipient countries, to allow greater purchase of U.S. agricultural commodities. He said an export PIK program should also be authorized and implemented.

Turning to the farm credit crisis, Morgan defined it as a symptom of an under-lying root cause--inadequate farm income. He pointed out that the farm debt-to-income ratio, which was less than three-to-one in 1974, had risen to almost eight-to-one in 1980, and was more than thirteen-to-one in 1983. "Clearly," Morgan said, "farm income is inadequate to service this debt load."

The NCFC chairman told committee members that our primary goal should be to enhance farm income. "Many argue that to do this we must be price competitive in the international market," he added. "We concur that steps must be taken to help us regain lost market shares, but they must be done in a way that doesn't out the full burden of competing against other governments on the backs of farmers."

Morgan emphasized that world markets have been distorted by external factors such as grain embargoes, the overvalued dollar, and unfair foreign trade practices. If the government is going to saddle farmers with these adverse conditions, he asserted, then the government has a responsibility to help farmers overcome the negative impact.

Choline and Dairy Cows

Adding Choline to the diets of dairy cattle already receiving adequate forage may make little difference in terms of their milk production, according to animal scientists at the University of Maryland. Although choline has no effect on milk production, researchers report it may make some difference in feed intake and percentage of fat in the milk cattle produce.

And COUNTER delivers cutworm suppression, too. All at one low rate.

Best for Conservation Tillage

If you practice conservation tillage, COUNTER fits your operation. You can apply it banded or in the seed furrow, where it can't blow away or get hung up in crop residues. COUNTER is seed safe, even applied in-furrow. And COUNTER controls on contact and systemically to protect your young crop and get it off to a fast, healthy stand.

Best for First-Year Corn

Rootworms may not be a major problem in your first-year corn, but there's a complex of other pests that attack your crop and can substantially reduce plant vigor, stands and yields. Little Dutchmen FFA celebrates silver anniversary

BY DONNA McCONAUGHEY
Staff Correspondent

ANNVILLE – The Little Dutchmen FFA chapter of Annville-Cleona School celebrated its silver anniversary during the annual banquet held last week at the high school.

The evening's program included greetings from three of the four advisors who have worked with the Little Dutchmen over the 25 years. Edward Kerr and Peter Boyer came back to join current advisor, Lowell Morton for the celebration. Former advisor Martin McMillion was unable to attend.

Highlighting the evening's program was the presentation of Star awards to FFA members. The winner of the Chapter Star Farmer award was Steve Reigel who also claimed the DeKalb award. The Chapter Star Agribusinessman was Andrew Baer. Star Greenhand honors were earned by Eric Harnish and Sheila Hostetter.

Three members won animals at the banquet. Recipients of the Blue Mt. View Farm Market Hog was Kent Reigel. The Kiwanis calf was presented to Susan Elliott and Daniel Brandt.

The Eleanor Witmeyer Award was presented to Eric Morton for citizenship, leadership, and cooperation.

The Little Dutchmen Parliamentary Procedure Team was honored for their achievements throughout the year. Their winnings included first in the state competition and a bronze award in the National Invitational Contest.

Several FFA officers were on hand to assist with the awards and program. Also present were business representatives and school officials.

Eastern Regional vice president Graham Boyd offered advice that was applicable to all present. Instead of focusing on the 20 percent of farmers that will not survive the current problems, "we need to focus on the 80 percent that will survive and continue to be involved in the number one industry in the United States."

Produce coatings pose religious problems

ITHACA, N.Y. – Shiny apples, sleek cucumbers, and other fruits and vegetables that look more like wax reproductions than the real things may present religious and philosophical problems for some people.

Sucrose fatty acid esters – recently approved by the federal government – give fruits and vegetables "a new coat" that slows ripening and spoilage. Although not a health problem, the esters are derived from beef fat which could be a concern for Jewish, Moslem, and vegetarian consumers.

The harmless coating, a compound of sugar and fat, can be applied by the shipper, wholesaler, or retailer.

A Cornell food scientist says that the presence of this compound can be identified in packaged goods, especially baked and dairy products, because it must be listed on the ingredients label.

With fruits and vegetables sold loosely or in bulk, though, a problem can arise, according to Joe M. Regenstein of the New York State College of Agriculture and Life Sciences at Cornell.

"Fruit is generally sold loose, and each piece of fruit is not labeled," he explains. "The law requires that all stores selling fruits or vegetables treated with any coating clearly display a sign identifying any coating compounds that are used."

For example, the law states that if the original container is used as part of the display, then its label – which must list any additives used – must be clearly visible. In the case of fancy fruits, where a paper wrapper is placed around each fruit, each sheet must contain the information.

Cucumbers, he says, often are sprayed with a petroleum-derived wax approved by the Food and Drug Administration. A label for this product also must be displayed clearly.

Although the labeling requirement is a federal law, the FDA depends on state agencies to enforce the law.

"It is quite clear that this law is not being enforced," says Regenstein who has done some spot checks of supermarkets. "When was the last time you saw a label for a waxed cucumber?" he asks.

Regenstein, who is in the department of poultry and avian sciences and the Institute of Food Science, both at Cornell, says that the sucrose fatty acid esters from tallow are not widely used on fruits at this time. But, because their use is permitted by law as of August 1983, consumers who will be adversely affected by this new law must educate the retailers from whom they purchase fruits and vegetables.

If a store refuses to comply with the law's sign requirements, Regenstein says, you can contact the regional Food and Drug Administration office or the state agency responsible for enforcing these regulations at the retail level.

Early Riser Planters

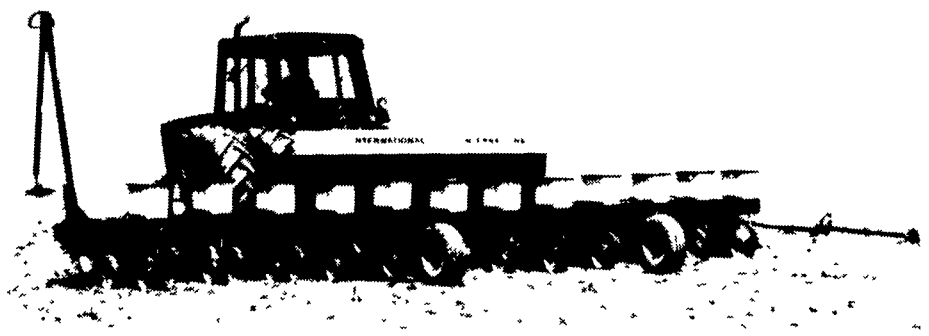
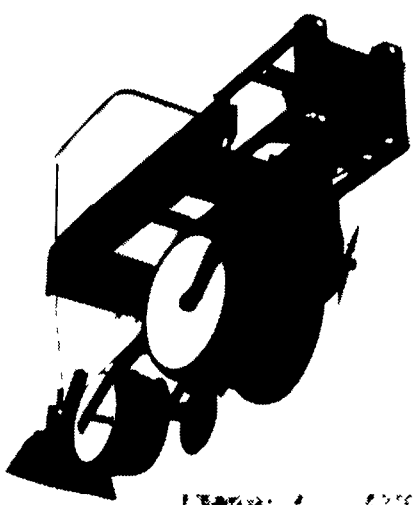
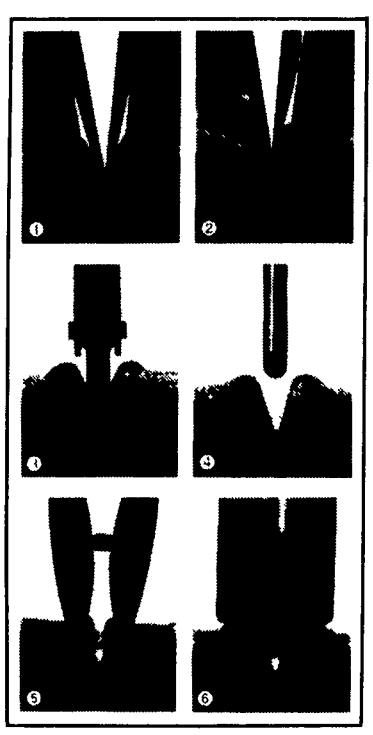
800 SERIES PLANTERS

In Stock, Set-Up, Ready For The Field!



EARLY RISER ROW UNITS



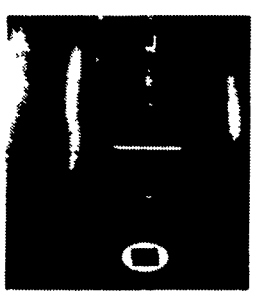


Here's an actual photo of the Early Riser press wheel track Note the cracking slit it leaves in the soil so young plants can emerge easier in crusty soil conditions

Early Riser row units provide ideal seed environment preparation and seed placement for fast germination and uniform emergence.

The Early Riser row unit is the most advanced assembly of its kind because it prepares and controls a seedbed environment conducive to fast germination and uniform seedling emergence in virtually all field conditions and ground preparation practices Its consistent performance is unmatched for achieving maximum yield potential Basically here s how the 800 Series row unit works

1. Staggered double disk opener design places one disk slightly ahead of the other so it opens the narrowest seed trench possible In addition the thin edge of the leading disk and the adjustable pressure springs work to penetrate hard soil easier and slice through heavy trash more effectively than conventional opener designs equipped with no till colters This reduces power requirements cuts plugging in trashy conditions and eliminates the need for expensive colter attachments
2. Exclusive front pull equalizing gauge wheels are connected through a special linkage that maintains equal pressure on the gauge wheels at all times As one wheel moves up over a clod the other wheel is forced down This equalizing action cuts opener movement to half the height of the obstacle and results in smoother row unit operation more uniform depth control and better seed placement especially in rough or untilled ground In addition both wheels are fitted with special profile moisture saving tires that trap moist soil alongside the furrow This allows moist soil to return to the trench first to surround the seed and help promote faster germination
3. IH patented furrow firming point firms the trench walls and removes loose soil from the bottom of the furrow leaving a well defined V shaped trench This eliminates seed bounce gives better seed to soil contact and improves capillary action of moisture to the seed for better, faster germination
4. More uniform seed depth placement is another benefit of smooth narrow seed trenches Seeds delivered to the trench are grasped firmly and held in place eliminating seed bounce The clean furrow bottom also assures every seed is placed at the same depth a must for reliable uniform emergence
5. Twin inverted covering disks control the amount of soil cover Positioned directly behind the openers they replace moist soil captured by the special profile tires to the seed trench first assuring faster germination Covering disk depth is set automatically when row unit depth is selected for complete control over covering performance In addition the twin disk cutting action reduces plugging in trashy field conditions when compared to other closing methods
6. Wide, semi-pneumatic press wheels gently compact soil over the seed to eliminate moisture robbing air pockets A center rib on each press wheel provides a cracking slit allowing young plants to emerge easier in crusty soil conditions The press wheels also produce a slightly mounded seedbed profile that is ideal for effective chemical banding



Match planter row unit performance to field conditions without tools One knob conveniently located on the rear of each planter unit sets depth gauge wheels opener and covering disk depth and press wheel down pressure The row unit knob works on an index that s zeroed at the factory All you have to do is determine the proper setting for one unit then set all the other units at the same place on the scale Nothing could be faster or easier

COMPARE A KRAUSE

Krause Rockflex Discs are unequalled in the field.

COMPARE

TIE RODS AND SPOOLS

Alloy steel tie rods are 1¾" in diameter on heavy duty units (1½" on medium duty). There's a nut on both ends for easy servicing. Krause spools are ductile iron and weigh 20-30 lbs. each. Precision machined with large diameter bells to fit snug against disc blade. SPOOLS ARE KRAUSE MADE.

COMPARE

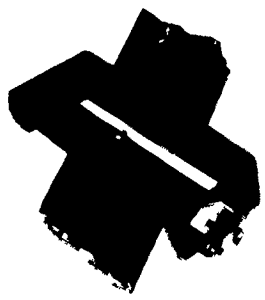
FRAMES
Engineered of super strength steel tubing with cross braces and gussets at major stress points.

WING HINGES
Krause uses big 1¾" diameter bolts on HD units (1½" on medium duty) with over 10" of wear surface area.



We have over 500 rockflex discs in the fields of PA, MD, NJ and DE. These Krause owners continue to prove daily that the Krause disc levels and cuts better than any other disc they've ever owned.

COMPARE

"ROCKFLEX" BEARING ARMS
Krause invented the Rockflex" arm in 1965. This C-shaped arm flexes over obstacles. It helps protect disc blades and spools from breakage.

COMPARE
PRICE: $ PER lb. KRAUSE DISC HARROWS ARE CHEAPER THAN THE MAJORS

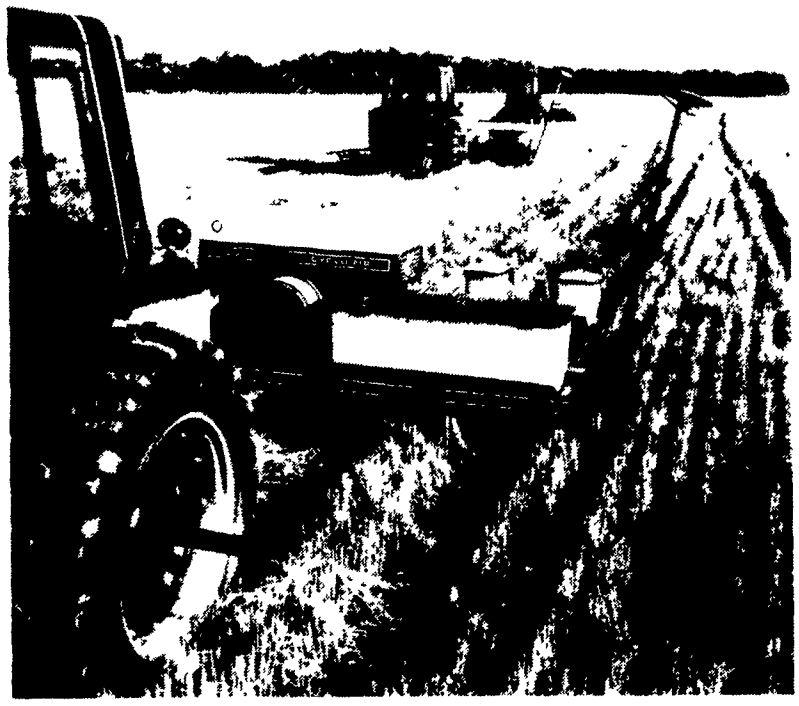
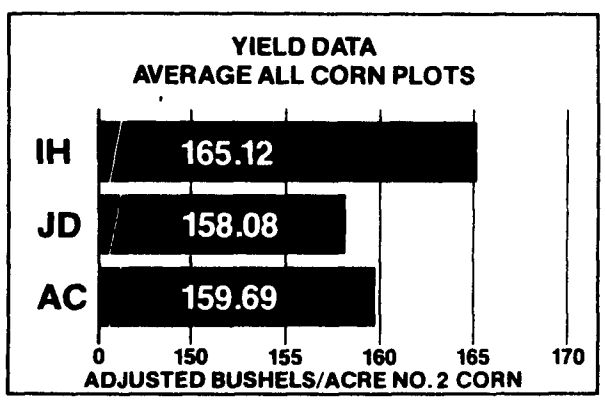
Early Riser Planters

Early Riser Outyielded Deere and Allis-Chalmers Planters in Independent Side by Side Tests...

Fourteen on-farm tests in five states conducted by an independent test firm confirmed that the International® 800 Series Early Riser planter can outperform the John Deere Max-Emerge® 7000 Conservation and Allis-Chalmers 333 No-Til planters in both emergence and yield.



THE FACTS BELOW SPEAK FOR THEMSELVES



Corn yields were based on hand harvested samples that were weighed, moisture tested and then adjusted for No. 2 corn at 15.5% moisture.

Egg prices up at "Angus on Parade" Sale

BY JACK HUBLEY

HARRISBURG — Though egg prices may be depressed in the poultry industry, consignors weren't complaining about the price of eggs at the combined Eastern National Heifer Calf and "Angus on Parade" Sales at the Farm Show Building last Saturday.

Topping the sale was an embryo from Clermont Barbara 99C, sired by Cobble Pond New Yorker that sold for an even $10,000. Mike George of York bought the blue ribbon Angus egg from consignors Buffalo Valley of Seven Valleys, Pleasant Valley of Lebanon and GH2 Angus Associates of York. A Progression daughter, Barbara was the Keystone International Livestock Expo's grand champion female in 1983.

Beef on the hoof was in demand as well, with a crowd of more than 400 pushing eight heifers over the $3,000 mark.

And Pine Drive Big Sky was the sire of the day, with 13 daughters selling, including the sale's top female, CLK Ida 284, consigned by Krause Farms of Slatington. Named reserve champion at this year's Farm Show, Ida went home to Chester County with Don Cairns of Parkesburg, who offered the top bid of $5,800.

Greg Krueger and Family of West Grove consigned the sale's number-two female, Kruegers Erica 22S. The Foolish Pride daughter went to South Branch Farm of York for $5,200.

Garnering a $4,000 bid was EC Miss Pine Drive 4994, consigned by Eden Croft Farm of Tyrone. This Pine Drive daughter was purchased by Cedar Hill Farm, Wellesville.

Skylark Marie 2R of RJR was the high selling bred heifer at $3,100. Owned by RJR Angus of Seven Valleys, she is due to calve to General JJ Patton.

Topping the bull sale was LA Skyrocket BP 56, a Pine Drive son owned by Dale Rains of Mercer. This year's Farm Show intermediate champion, Skyrocket went to Swecker Bros. of West Virginia for $1,200.

Also offered was a "basket of eggs" consigned by Gaylan Angus Farm of Kimberton. John Davis made the long trip north from Mississippi to take home seven of them, including four embryos by New Yorker and three by Wrangler. The donor cow for these embryos was Nelson Erica 7063.

In the Pennsylvania Angus Association's semen sale, 13 units went for $3,125. South Branch Farm of York, and T&J Farms of Dover topped the bidding, paying $500 each for a pair of straws by HAR Bang, the grand champion at the National Western Livestock Show. All semen sale proceeds were donated to the Pennsylvania Junior Angus Association for their upcoming Eastern Regional Junior Heifer Show to be held in York.

When the dust finally settled, buyers had paid an average of $1,800 for 55 lots, bringing the sale's total receipts to $98,820, and making this year's event the highest priced in the "Angus on Parade" Sale's five-year history.

E-town veterinarian loses federal accreditation

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The U.S. Department of Agriculture has suspended the federal accreditation of four veterinarians for allegedly falsifying health tests required for international and interstate livestock shipments.

According to Bert W. Hawkins, administrator of the USDA's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, Alan D. McCauley of Elizabethtown is accused of substituting blood for blood samples from four cattle that previously had tested positive for bovine leukosis. Embryos from these animals were destined for export to West Germany.

Other veterinarians included in the action were:

James H. Nadler of Peontone, accused of falsely certifying the health of 187 cattle by using blood samples from one animal that tested negative for several diseases in place of samples from each of the cattle which were to be exported to Taiwan.

Bobby Guilford of Glasgow, Ky., accused of falsifying health certificates for interstate shipment of 53 cattle from Kentucky to Indiana.

Robert L. Kinkead of Columbia, Mo., accused of conducting tests and signing health certificates under another name while his accreditation had been previously suspended.

"Because of the seriousness of the alleged violations and their potential for spreading disease," Hawkins said, "we have taken action to immediately suspend the federal accreditation of the accused veterinarians. All four will have an opportunity to discuss the charges in an informal conference or under formal proceedings."

USDA accredits practicing veterinarians to perform official services in conjunction with interstate and international shipments of livestock.

Hawkins said suspension or revocation of accreditation does not affect a veterinarian's state license to practice veterinary medicine. It does, however, take away the right to provide certain professional services that can be performed only by accredited veterinarians, such as health certification for interstate and international animal movements, and official services with cooperative state-federal animal health programs.

Sheep producers approve reduced budget for 1985-86

DENVER, Colo. — The American sheep industry will benefit from the multi-million dollar budget approved by directors of the American Sheep Producers Council recently in Denver to market and promote sheep products in the United States for the industry. The new plan of work for 1985-86 fiscal year includes market studies, targeted marketing, new product development and expanded promotion and advertising programs. ASPC board members met March 12-14 at the Brown Palace Hotel.

ASPC's budget of $4,850,000 for fiscal year 1985-86 is $330,000 less than the 1984-85 budget due to a reduction in sheep numbers and less wool sold in marketing year 1984. ASPC's operating budget is based on a percentage of total incentive payments paid to producers under the authority of the Wool Act from tariffs assessed on specific classes of imported raw wools and some wool fabrics. The incentive payments were established as compensation for markets lost to imports and recognition of wool being a strategic commodity. The Wool Act is up for renewal this year as part of the 1985 Farm Bill.

"The Wool Act is the sheep industry's number-one problem," said National Wool Grower Association's Wool Act chairman Bill Pfluger speaking to ASPC directors. Pfluger, a San Angelo, Texas producer, explained the status of the Act. Several versions of the Farm Bill will be introduced in Congress and treatment of the Wool Act in the proposals range from phase out to maintaining it in its present form.

A queen is crowned

Melanie Hemminger of Somerset was crowned Pennsylvania Cattlemen's Queen at the Association's banquet on Mar. 16, at the Allenberry Resort. The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Hemminger, she was chosen from a field of eight finalists to represent the beef industry this year.

Sows with a sweet tooth

Getting sows to eat more during lactation is an on-going problem in most farrowing units. If feed consumption isn't high enough, the sow herd will not remain productive. Efforts to make feeds tastier have met with varying degrees of success. In research performed at the University of Minnesota several trials were conducted in hopes of finding methods to minimize sow body weight loss, boost milk production and improve returns to estrus and subsequent conception rates.

It was speculated that sows consume coarse ground feed better than fine-ground feed. The trial involved 99 sows fed an identical ration, except for the texture of the meal. The sows were virtually identical in weight loss during lactation, piglet survival, litter weaning weight, returns to estrus and conception rate.

Theoretically, there are two reasons to feed more frequently: feed stays fresher, and it encourages sows to stand more frequently which should improve appetite. Dietary sweeteners, aromatic compounds and feed flavors have been found to improve ration acceptance in nursery pigs, so researchers tried adding 2.5 percent sugar, hoping to entice sows to eat more. The sugar-fed sows ate 13.6 lbs. more feed than the control group during the first week but the intakes were the same after three weeks.

Rations containing added fat are known to have higher energy densities and improved palatability, if fresh. The Minnesota research concluded with litters of fat-fed sows weighing 7 pounds more than the control litters. During the four-week trial, sows on a liquid feeder ate 1.08 pounds more feed daily and were 14 pounds heavier than sows fed dry feed. But sows on wet feeders weaned lighter litters by about 7 pounds. Piglet survival, return to estrus and conception rates were unaffected.

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Secretary of Agriculture John R. Block recently announced encouraging results from testing of a genetically-engineered antigen that could help develop a vaccine against coccidiosis, a disease which costs the poultry industry $300 million a year.

Block said the protection was not complete but the results were "highly encouraging" because the new antigen conferred the first protection ever obtained against any species of coccidia by any method other than inducing actual infection.

Previous global research efforts to produce a vaccine based upon either dead coccidia or antigens made from them had failed.

Orville G. Bentley, asssitant secretary for science and education, said the antigen was engineered by Russell McCandliss and colleagues at Genex Corp. of Rockville, Md., using antibodies produced by USDA's Agricultural Research Service.

"This research is a good example of how USDA scientists work with industry to solve agricultural problems," Block said. USDA scientists will work with Genex to turn the antigen into a vaccine for the poultry industry.

Coccidiosis costs the poultry industry $200 million a year in dead and weakened chickens and turkeys, and an additional $100 million a year for ongoing medication of boiler flocks. Coccidia are parasites that attack a bird's intestinal tract, either causing death or weakening the bird through weight loss due to improper utilization of feed. The parasite also causes a paler skin color.

Cornell students plan livestock show

ITHACA, NY — How fast can you milk a cow? When's the last time you were in a potato-sack race? Did you ever see a beloved bovine trained for a show?

You can see and do all of these things and much more if you come to the annual Cornell Livestock Show Saturday, April 20, on campus.

Open to the public, the day's events include an afternoon chicken barbeque, a tug-o-war, a cow milking contest, and three different and amusing races–potato-sack, egg and spoon, and three-legged. All events will be in the Cornell Livestock Pavilion. These events run from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m.

The livestock showing will take place all day, featuring more than 100 farm animals, including dairy cows, beef cattle, sheep, swine, goats, and horses. Students with the highest score in each animal class will earn grand champion awards. These grand champions will then compete with each other, each showing all six animal classes, for the title of "premier showman."

For more information about the show, contact Paul Reed or his co-chair, Dave Fernandez, at (607) 256-4416.

Seeding Time Is Here

Spring seeding time is right on our doorstep. And now is a good time to briefly review several of those practices essential to assure good alfalfa stands and top yields for the life of the stand. So here is a brief run-down on some of my thoughts for getting that stand off to a good start.

Choose Varieties that will Perform for You

This, of course, is an essential first step. Seed cost represents only 3 to 3½ percent of the annual cost of growing your alfalfa crop. Yet the difference between a high performance variety and an average performing variety can be 3 to 4 tons or more of hay equivalent per acre over the life of the stand.

In general today we think of a high performance variety as one that has high yield and high quality potential, and high tolerance or resistance to the major diseases prevalent in your area. This is often referred to as multi-pest resistance.

What are those major disease pests? That depends on where you live and your soil drainage conditions. But among those considered most important are Bacterial Wilt, Anthracnose, Phytophthora Root Rot (wet foot disease), Fusarium Wilt and Verticillium Wilt. Certain of the newer varieties also have resistance or tolerance to some insect pests including Pea Aphid and tolerance to leafhopper yellowing.

So check to be sure the variety you've chosen has high tolerance or resistance to the diseases known to be a threat in your area.

Lime & Fertilizer for Top Yield

A soil pH of 6.7 or above at the time of seeding is an absolute must for top alfalfa performance. It's also well established that adequate fertility is essential to the success of new seedings. In the Pennsylvania Alfalfa Growers Program, for example, top yields generally were produced on fields where plenty of manure had been applied on the field in the corn phase of the rotation and P & K levels were high when the seeding was made.

And, of course, I couldn't pass up this opportunity to remind you that a good soil test is your best guide to knowing the lime and fertility status of your soils.

Make That Seeding Soon

Spring seedings should normally be made as early as the seedbed can be prepared when soil and air temperatures are near optimum for alfalfa - and soil moisture is adequate for germination and seedling development. Seeding early on a fertile, well-prepared, firm seedbed without a companion crop eliminates most of the major hazards for making seedings at this time of year.

Be Sure the Seedbed is Firm

Assuming you're making a seeding on a prepared seedbed be sure the seedbed is firm, fine and mellow on the surface. Loose soils dry out near the surface and may result in limited moisture in the seed zone. A firm seedbed is also essential to permit uniform, shallow coverage of seed. If you're making a no-till stubble seeding chances are good you already have that near perfect seedbed.

Control Weeds and Insects at Seeding

Competition from weeds for light, moisture and nutrients can be serious during that critical establishment period. Annual grass weeds can be controlled with a pre-plant, properly incorporated treatment Eptam and Balan. On the other hand 2,4-DB is effective for the control of annual broadleaf weeds if applied when the weeds are very small. It all comes down to knowing the potential weed problem in the field you're making a seeding.

The use of Furadan for control of soil born insects and partial control of leafhoppers on new seedings, has also been generally effective with spring seedings regardless of seeding conditions. And if you're making a no-till stubble seeding Furadan is almost a must.

But for your own protection as well as for the best results if you use either a herbicide or insecticide be sure to read the label and use the product according to recommendations.

A Look at Seeding Methods

When seeding on a prepared seedbed band seeding is still an excellent seeding technique. And the packer wheel drill which combines band seeding with firming over the row is ideal. Of course the cultipacker seeder which broadcasts the seed but firms the soil around the seed will also do a good job.

Of newer techniques on a prepared seedbed fluid seeding, i.e. mixing the seed in a liquid fertilizer suspension, including an insecticide if desired, and spraying the seeds onto the seedbed, looks good. This is basically a custom applicator technique since it requires special spray equipment and nozzles. But it is a great way to get a time consuming job done properly in short order at a time when you're busy with other field chores. Cultipacking before and after seeding is still essential but when your custom applicator follows the rules there's no detrimental effect on seed or inoculum and the resultant stands are almost always good.

As suggested above no-till seedings in small grain or corn stubble have also gained lots of favor among Northeastern growers. If your fertility and weed control programs are sound this could be a good route to go. It's also a good time to use Furadan at the time of seeding.

Seeding rate is important too. But the correct seeding rate is a function of several things, including seedbed, seeding technique, time and depth of seeding, etc. Usually 15 to 18 pounds of seed per acre is adequate for a pure stand while about 12 pounds of alfalfa per acre is usually adequate if a grass is included.

Speaking of a companion grass with alfalfa, mixtures including tetraploid perennial ryegrass have gotten the fancy of many growers. But keep the seeding rate of ryegrass in line, probably not more than 6 to 8 pounds per acre, and manage to favor the legume.

I certainly haven't considered all of the factors. And top growers are really refining all of their establishment procedures.

One thing is sure if you don't have a good stand, even if you do have a good fertility program, you can't hope to cash in on the yeild potential of that high performance variety.

Soybean outlook down for '85, up long-term

RALEIGH, N.C. – U.S. soybean exports in 1985 are likely to decline for the second year in a row, according to Dennis Sharpe, director of economic analysis for the American Soybean Association (ASA). Despite a slow growth in demand, Sharpe projected that U.S. soybean acreage planted will increase 23 percent by the mid-1990s to meet the needs of the world export market.

Summarizing reports from ASA's overseas marketing directors at the Ciba-Geigy-sponsored World Soybean Outlook Teleconference here today, Sharpe estimated 1985 soybean exports of 715 million bushels, below the record high volume of 929 million bushels in 1981. Reasons for the decline include: the strong U.S. dollar; increased competition from Brazil; government subsidies to soybean producers in other countries; and competition from "home-grown" oil substitutes overseas.

Dr. Karl Fangauf, ASA's director, Northern Europe, said that while soybean exports to the European Economic Community (EEC) will grow, lower quality, less expensive protein sources are making inroads in swine rations.

Ing. Aldo Pontecorvo, ASA's director, Mexico and Central America, reported that the U.S. currently has about 90 percent market share of the 3 million metric tons of soybeans exported to Latin America.

According to Pontecorvo, by 1990 the use of soybeans in swine diets could grow by 10-15 percent, and 5 percent or more in poultry diets. "With adequate market-development activities, total soybean exports to Latin America could double in five years," Pontecorvo said.

Dr. David Erickson, ASA's director, soy oil programs, said that soybean oil currently has an 80 percent share of the U.S. vegetable oil market. However, that market could easily be captured by competing oils due to lack of customer loyalty and lack of identified soybean oils. ASA's objective, Erickson said, is "...to maintain our dominant market share..."

Erickson also described current ASA programs directed to use of soybean oil as a carrier or adjuvant for pesticides, to control dust in grain handling, and as a raw material in chemical manufacture.

Dr. Donald Bushman, ASA's director, Southeast Asia, reported that soybean imports to the region increased 250 percent in the past four years, and that the U.S. market share is now 41.5 percent. He indicated that the potential for expansion is significant in swine, poultry and aquaculture feeds.

Hummingbirds face fenceline electrocution

COLLEGE PARK, Md. – Electric fences have some surprising side effects. In addition to keeping livestock inside pastures and pens, some of them are thinning out the hummingbird population in rural areas.

John F. Kundt, Extension forestry specialist at the University of Maryland in College Park, says that some hummingbirds seem to mistake electric-fence insulators for flowers. They are electrocuted if they touch the grounded steel fence post and the hot wire when they try to feed on an insulator.

The hummingbirds' problem with electric fences started when colored plastic began to replace white ceramic insulators.

Dr. Kundt reports that it is red and orange insulators that pose the greatest problem to the birds. By using white or dark-colored insulators, farmers can end the threat at its source.

Donald H. Messersmith, professor of entomology at College Park, notes that ruby-throated hummingbirds prefer to feed on red or orange flowers.

Dr. Messersmith says that the hummingbirds winter on the Yucatan peninsula in Mexico. They return to Maryland in April and remain through September. Rubythroats feed on nectar from trumpet-shaped flowers like the cardinal flower, bergamot and salvia. They also love trumpet-creeper and azalea flowers.

Brubaker Agronomic honors top growers for '84

LEOLA — Brubaker Agronomic Consulting Service honored top producing farmers at their 6th Annual Summary and Awards Banquet on Mar. 15, at the Leola Family Restaurant.

Arthur Hess of Leola recorded the highest corn yield of all 450 yield checks recorded by the firm, harvesting 220 bushels per acre. Eleven growers were recognized for outstanding yields in excess of 200 bushels per acre.

Annville area farmer Tom Graby reported the highest sweetcorn yield, harvesting eight tons per acre.

In addition to an award ceremony and summary of the 1984 growing season, the event featured two guest speakers. Stan Michonski, an agricultural loan officer with New Holland Farmers National Bank, advised farmers on agricultural lending procedures. Also on the program was farmer Kenneth Hershey of Kinzers, who related his own experiences concerning agriculture's financial pitfalls.

Stan Michonski, of the New Holland Farmers National Bank, addressed a gathering of 120 growers at Brubaker Agronomic's Annual Summary and Awards Banquet on Mar. 15.

Michael Brubaker, proprietor of Brubaker Agronomic, concluded the program with the results of agronomy experiments conducted last year, and a look at new ideas for the coming growing season.

AgDisk debuts feed formulation program

LINCOLN, Nebr. — With the new AgDisk Feed Formulation Program, livestock feeders can easily compare feed costs, analyze nutrient needs and verify ration adequacies. This program has been carefully written for users with little or no computer experience by Harris AgDisk. The most profitable and nutritionally balanced rations can be formulated with this new easy-to-use program.

The clear instructions on the screen and in the 50-page user's manual make least-cost formulation easy, even for the first-time feeder or computer user. Nutritional recommendations for swine, dairy, and beef cattle, which expert sources have provided, are pre-entered in the program for general guidelines. The user can change these recommendations to satisfy the specific requirements of his livestock.

Average nutrient content for over 100 feed ingredients has also been pre-entered for easy use if the user does not know the exact nutrient content of his ingredients. Results from feed analysis can be entered and used rather than the table of averages to tailor the AgDisk Feed Formulation program to the exact situation of any livestock feeder.

Least cost rations, adequacy of the ration, and feed mixing instructions are all standard included in the Harris AgDisk Feed Formulation program. Graphs, such as the ration adequacy graph, are also included in the program.

Feed Formulation, which is the 24th product in the Harris AgDisk agricultural software line, retails for $300. This program is presently available on the Apple IIe, Apple IIc, and IBM PC microcomputers.

More information on the AgDisk Feed Formulation program, along with the other 23 Harris AgDisk programs, can be obtained from Harris Technical Systems, 624 Peach Street, P.O. Box 80837, Lincoln, Nebraska 68501, 800-228-4091.

Mist sprayer saves time a

The Automatic Mist Sprayer with Micronizer Spray Head will save time and chemicals in spraying vegetables, according to Ryder Supply. The Micronizer breaks up spray into uniform fine particles so you get more coverage with every gallon of spray.

The fine particle spray also means you can spray more concentrated solutions and cover more area with each tankload. This means less water hauling and eliminates back-up crews.

The Mist Sprayer is a durable unit with heavy-duty frame, nylon roller pump and powerful centrifugal fan. The fan is powered by double V-belt drive for the PTO. Both 20- and 50-gallon tanks are available.

Eastern completes Leprino loan

SYRACUSE, N.Y. – Eastern Milk Producers Cooperative's General Manager, Michael Donovan, announced, recently, the completion of payments on a three year loan from Leprino Foods Company of Denver, Colorado. The final monthly installment was made March 1.

Eastern secured the loan in April 1982, as part of the financing for the purchase of the two cheese plants in Waverly and Horseheads, New York. The plants are leased by Leprino, the nation's largest manufacturer of mozzarella cheese.

"The completed payments are not only indicative of the continuing success of the Eastern/Leprino venture," said Donovan, "but also of the steady growth and financial stability of our cooperative."

Eastern Milk Producers Cooperative Association, Inc., is the largest dairy cooperative in the Northeast, serving 4,200 members throughout New York, Pennsylvania, Vermont, New Hampshire, Maryland, Delaware, New Jersey, and West Virginia.

J I Case sets price rollbacks

RACINE, Wisc. – J I Case, a leading manufacturer of agricultural and construction equipment, has announced a price reduction on new four-wheel drive farm tractors and construction equipment products shipped from its U.S. plants after March, 1985, according to John A. Borden, executive vice president, marketing. Borden said the rollbacks result from increased efficiencies in manufacturing and product development.

Price reductions for new Case International four-wheel drive agricultural tractors vary from 5.5 percent to 8.6 percent, effective in April when production of new style tractors begins. Case recently acquired the North American agricultural equipment operations of International Harvester Co.

Borden said the price move "gives Case customers the benefits of our successful efforts to lower overhead while improving quality. Prices will now better reflect what's actually happening in the market today and 'show Case's continuing commitment to provide greater value to the customer."

Headquartered in Racine, Wisconsin, J I Case is a worldwide manufacturer and marketer of agricultural and construction equipment. Case is an affiliate of Tenneco Inc.

Commodity loan rate stays even

WASHINGTON — Commodity loans disbursed in March by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Commodity Credit Corporation will carry a 9-1/8 percent interest rate, the same as the rate in effect for February, CCC Executive Vice President Everett Rank said today.

The 9-1/8 percent rate reflects the interest rate charged CCC by the U.S. Treasury in March, Rank said.

New swine drinker offers variable flow

CLEAR LAKE, Iowa — The Feed Wetter II, recently introduced by ASDIC, LTD, is the latest in swine drinkers. The drinker with its large and easy to push trigger has many uses, among them farrowing crates and wet feeders.

With this drinker one has the advantages of the simplicity and cleanliness of a nipple, however by using an existing pan or trough does not create the need or expense of a bowl. The drinker by making water easily accessible to the pigs, does promote increased performance and better feed conversion. It is an added benefit during the hot summer months when the sow is encouraged to stay on feed due to a more palatable diet.

The Feed Wetter II features a variable flow control orifice to work under different water pressures and a removable filter. It is made of stainless steel and brass for long life.

• 20-inch diameter front coulter blades spaced 7½ inches apart cut through the heaviest trash, eliminating the need for prior disking. The coulter blade gangs with trunion-mounted bearings are cushion mounted to absorb shock and protect the coulter blades.

• Deep-reaching chisel shanks follow the coulter blades and break up hardpan while incorporating about 50 to 60% of the residue into the soil. Shanks are 32 inches long to provide 10 to 12 inch soil penetration while maintaining good trash clearance.

• 3-bar frame with solid front bar and axle provides the extra weight needed to assure penetration even at high speeds.

• Available in 5 to 13-shank models in weights up to 7,450 pounds. Choose rigid or spring cushion clamps to match your soil conditions.

Lancaster Co. adds 2,000 acres to Ag Preserve program

LANCASTER – Lancaster County farmland designated as Agricultural Preserves recently topped 41,000 acres with the addition of approximately 2,000 acres of productive agricultural land in northern Conestoga Township.

The Conestoga Agricultural Preserve is the third priority area for preservation officially adopted by Lancaster County. The County's first agricultural preserve was designated in 1983 and consists of 12,100 acres of predominantly prime farmland in portions of clay, Elizabeth, Ephrata, Warwick and West Cocalico Townships. Western Lancaster County contains the second agricultural preserve established, and numbers 27,000 acres in Conoy, East Donegal, West Donegal and Mount Joy Townships.

Agricultural Preserve establishment is intended to secure a more permanent agricultural resource base, minimize the pressures of incompatible development on farming and target preservation benefits to these areas most important to the future of agriculture.

The effects of the Agricultural Preserve establishment are:

• A new policy area in which normal agricultural activities are given added protection and insulation from nuisance complaints and suits.

• A new policy which will discourage and steer away or prohibit new unplanned highways, public facilities, and public land acquisition from occurring in the Preserve.

• Priority and eligibility for qualified farm owners in the Preserve to voluntarily participate in Lancaster County's preservation deed restriction program. Landowners may place preservation deed restrictions on property by donation for which there may be income, estate, and property tax advantages or may offer to sell a deed restriction for which $250/acre is offered.

Another option is the placement of a right of first refusal agreement which will, like a deed restriction, prevent the development and conversion of productive agricultural land. As a last resort, if farmland in a Preserve is under immediate development pressure and is for sale, Lancaster County may compete on the open market to buy the farm, place a preservation deed restriction, and resell the farm limited to agricultural use. This purchase and resale option will not be used often, and is an option that has not yet been implemented in the County.

The designation of the Conestoga Agricultural Preserve by the Board of County Commissioners was preceeded by endorsement of the Preserve by the Lancaster County Agricultural Preserve Board, Conestoga Township municipal officials, County Planning Commission, and a majority of landowners in the Preserve.

The Agricultural Preserve Board reminds landowners in Agricultural Preserves of the April 1, 1985, deed restriction sale application deadline.

KINZE introduces "Spra-Kart"

WILLIAMSBURG, Iowa – Two liquid tank wagons, built to haul 500-and 980-gallon loads, have recently been introduced by KINZE Manufacturing, Inc., Williamsburg, Iowa 52361.

The new KINZE Spra-Karts (Models 500 and 1000) travel softly on huge, giant-trend, high-flotation tires. Ground pressure, even when tanks are fully loaded, is less than 15 lbs./sq. in. Both units come equipped with heavy-duty hubs and spindles on a single axle trailer for easy handling.

The top-loading poly tanks are cradled by a reinforced steel frame. An FMC-HYD-204 hydraulic-driven ACE pump is mounted on the unit's trailer bed platform. Two extra valves for lifting or folding additional tillage equipment are also built into the rear of the Spra-Kart along with a heavy-duty hitch for trailing purposes.

Tire sizes for the Model 500 are 18.4 x 26 - 6-ply tires; and for the Model 1000, 23.1 x 26 - 8-ply tires. The Model 1000 can also be equipped with a larger set of tires–24.5 x 32 - 12-ply–for even greater flotation on a modified 1000 HD unit.

KINZE's new "Spra-Karts" are equipped with 500 or 980-gallon tanks.

DeKalb agronomist offers alfalfa selection advice

DEKALB, Ill. — Tight economic times on the farm have forced farmers to cut back in many areas, including production costs. However, if you're growing alfalfa, it's important to look past the initial investment when choosing a variety, says Merlin Eichstadt, Regional Agronomist for DeKalb-Pfizer Genetics.

"A poor decision at planting will stay with you for many years and could cost several hundred dollars over a typical four-year alfalfa crop," he warns. Eichstadt advises farmers to look at several critical factors when selecting an alfalfa.

Yield

This is an important factor but one that is not easily measured, the agronomist says. He advises farmers to examine alfalfa test results from universities and alfalfa organizations to obtain accurate yield information.

Studies from several states have shown that yearly alfalfa yields of 8 to 10 tons per acre are within reach for producers who use intensive management practices.

Fast Start

It's important to select a variety that establishes a strong foothold early, thereby decreasing yield-reducing weed competition, Eichstadt notes. University of Minnesota research shows the difference in yields after first-year seeding could be as much as 50 percent among varieties, he adds.

Winter Hardiness

Once established, it is important for the alfalfa variety to withstand the extreme temperature variations experienced throughout much of the country's major alfalfa-producing regions.

"Tests reveal that plant death loss during the winter can amount to 90 percent of the stand," Eichstadt says. "That means lower yields per acre, a 4-ton per acre difference over four years in one University of Minnesota study." The stand loss also means more frequent reseeding than normal, which makes cheaper seed actually very expensive, he adds.

Disease Resistance

Depending on soil conditions, Phytophthora root rot is a disease that can be a problem, especially in low-lying, wet soil conditions, Eichstadt says. Another disease, verticilium wilt, will reduce yields as early as the second season and can significantly thin stands by the third year. Producers with either of these conditions should consider resistant varieties.

Irrigation/Dryland Performance

During the life of an alfalfa stand, growing conditions may vary from ample rainfall to drought, so producers should review alfalfa variety performance under variable moisture conditions. Some varieties do well under dryland or irrigated conditions but not both. A few varieties adapt to varying moisture conditions and should be the grower's first choice.

Fast Regrowth

Many varieties produce high yields from the first cutting but show marked yield decreases in subsequent harvests. They cannot recover from an aggressive management schedule, says Eichstadt.

Producers should look for a variety with the potential to quickly develop a good, leafy canopy that turns the sun's energy into forage while battling weed pressure. Growers can harvest more cuttings and tonnage from varieties with fast regrowth.

Crude Protein Content

A ton of alfalfa is not necessarily a ton in terms of protein, a content, notes the agronomist. Research indicates that striking differences can be found in levels of protein produced per acre. In forage variety tests conducted by the Lafayette County Forage Council in Belmont, Wisc., crude protein percentages ranged from 19.5 percent to 22.5 percent.

This research also showed that the value of the crude protein levels produced by several alfalfa varieties may differ by as much as $150 per acre per year.

These selection factors must be combined with intensive management to produce top yields of high-quality forage, Eichstadt emphasizes. But, he says, the plant genetic potential to achieve high-quality forage exists for those producers who are willing to select the top hybrids and manage them well.

Penn State's Ag Dean takes helm at Washington State

UNIVERSITY PARK — Dr. Samuel H. Smith, dean of the College of Agriculture at The Pennsylvania State University, has been named president of Washington State University, effective July 1, WSU's board of regents have announced.

His position as dean includes the additional posts of director of the Agricultural Experiment Station and director of the Pennsylvania Cooperative Extension Service. In 1983-84, he also served as chairman of the Council of Academic Deans at Penn State.

"Washington State University has chosen an extremely capable individual in Sam Smith," Penn State President Bryce Jordan said. "The University is losing an outstanding dean, a scholar, and a personal friend. Sam has my congratulations and warm wishes for a successful presidency as he takes on his challenging new responsibilities in a professional progression that those of us who know him well regarded as predictable and inevitable. We will miss his at Penn State.

Dr. Smith has been involved inextensive service activities both nationally and statewide. These have included active participation in the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges as a member of the Division of Agriculture Board of Directors and its Committee on Biotechnology. He is chairman of the Council of Administrative Heads of Agriculture, which is the national association of deans of agriculture.

Within the state, he serves in several capacities, including membership on the State Conservation Commission, State Farm Show Commission, and Board of Overseers of the School of Veterinary Medicine of the University of Pennsylvania.

SELL IT WITH A LANCASTER FARMING CLASSIFIED

21st Century Genetics Co-op formed

SHAWANO, Wis. — 21st Century Genetics Cooperative is the new name of the nation's largest direct-member, farmer-owned cattle breeding cooperative.

21st Century Genetics was chosen as a marketing name following the February 1 consolidation of Midwest Breeders Cooperative, Shawano, Wis., and Minnesota Valley Breeders Association (MVBA), located in New Prague, Minn. The new name replaces the interim title of MBC-MVBA.

The name reflects many of the co-op's thrusts in marketing and genetics. As the new organization's parent cooperatives were already strong forces in national and international semen sales, the name sought avoided any strict regional identity.

The name also points out the future orientation of the co-op's genetic power. With genetic leaders in all major dairy breeds, 21st Century Genetics is positioned to meet the needs of dairy producers in the present, and studies show the co-op's future "bull power" to be equally impressive.

There was also a desire to pick a name that would reflect many of the new technologies emerging in animal sciences, including research supported by 21st Century Genetics Cooperative.

The new name also reflects the "21" stud code number that will identify all sires marketed by the cooperative. Midwest Breeders Cooperative used the "21" code for many years. The National Association of Animal Breeders (NAAB) assigns a stud code number to all businesses marketing animal semen in the U.S. All bulls marketed by recognized organizations have a stud code number that provides a unique identity.

For members of 21st Century Genetics, early April will mark the time when semen from both organizations' sire lineups can be ordered. Integration of processing and distribution systems is expected to be completed by that time.

Tom Lyon, general manager of 21st Century Genetics, has also named his division directors.

Heading a new division of Planning and Development is Don Ausman. Ausman formerly headed the Distributor Marketing Division for Midwest Breeders Cooperative. The position involves long-range planning and special projects.

Heading the Member Marketing Division is Herb Behnke. Behnke, an AI industry leader with 38 years of experience, will continue many of the same duties he held with Midwest, including AI training and supervision of two regional sales managers, 11 district sales managers, about 20 sales representatives and about 230 professional sales and sevice technicians in the member service area.

Don Solberg, formerly marketing director with MVBA, will head the Distributor Marketing Division. Solberg will have responsibilities for marketing the co-op's semen and services outside of the member area, including international marketing.

Continuing in his role as Director of Genetic Programs is Doug Wilson. Wilson headed the Midwest genetics division for about nine years and has been in the AI industry for 15 years.

Heading up production from the cooperative's facilities in Shawano, Stewartville, Mn., and New Prague, is Glen Gilbert. Gilbert had been Director of Production for Midwest Breeders for four years.

F.C. Van Dyck, already named treasurer of 21st Century Genetics, will continue as Finance and Control Division head. Van Dyck recently completed his 25th year of working at Midwest.

James Leuenberger was picked to head the Information and Public Relations Division, a position he held with Midwest for 10 years.

Jim Olson will continue to head the remaining Harvestore dealership in 21st Century Genetics. Olson will be located at New Prague and will head the service and maintenance-oriented dealership. The Bank for Cooperatives at St. Paul will manage the $11 million Harvestore loan portfolio under a managerial agreement.

FmHA adds 2,000 workers to aid loan processing

WASHINGTON — Secretary of Agriculture John R. Block said the Farmers Home Administration is utilizing over 2,000 extra people to help process loans for farmers in time for spring planting.

"Our staff is working around the clock in some areas to review the loans of more than 104,000 FmHA borrowers seeking to restructure their debts," Block said. "We have already helped over 41,000 borrowers with reamortizations, reschedulings and deferrals since last September when President Reagan announced our credit package. Another 6,000 have had a portion of their loans set aside with no interest for five years."

Block said that in an effort to ensure that as many farmers as possible receive credit before planting, the following actions have been taken:

–Some 150 field personnel from the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service and Extension Service have been assigned to assist FmHA in those states with the largest case loads. The Soil Conservation Service also pledged personnel as needed.

–Non-profit organizations have volunteered about 60 people, and state governments have assigned nearly 130 people to assist. Block said more help is expected from these sources during the next few weeks.

–FmHA county offices have contracted with over 400 farm management and farm credit specialists to help borrowers maximize their cashflow and restructure their debt.

–Over 100 FmHA personnel have been assigned to teams which will travel on short notice to any location where a farm lending institution has failed. Working with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, which is responsible for loans held by a failed bank, the team members will identify stranded loans that may be eligible for FmHA guarantees.

"We have a good credit package in place and we have the necessary personnel to handle the workload," Block said. "I am certain that with the cooperation from everyone who has an interest in agriculture, we can continue to move forward and make it work."

Shaving costs critical in soybean production

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. – Holding down soybean production costs has never been more important than it is this year, with market prices stuck around the $6 mark, and with costs rising again for inputs like seed, fertilizer and chemicals. Last years farmers' costs to put soybeans in the ground increased $4 per acre, and they are forecast to rise again slightly this year, according to Chase Econometrics.

Fortunately, there are ways to cut the biggest component of this variable cost–chemicals–which is forecast to average $17.63 per acre in 1985, or 29 percent of the total variable cost per acre for soybeans.

This is the year to re-think crop chemical programs to take advantage of the new cost relationships. Here are some steps for cutting soybean production costs:

1. Calibrate your sprayer. This simple step could save farmers over a billion dollars this year, according to a study conducted by the University of Nebraska. The study showed that most farmers are missing their intended rate by more than 10 percent, resulting in poor weed control, crop damage and/or wasted chemicals.

Calibrating a sprayer is a simple task, though it does require a pencil and paper and a trial run with the sprayer filled with water. Instructions on how to do it are available from most chemical dealers.

Besides calibrating, a farmer should make sure his sprayer is operating at a low pressure of 20 to 40 pounds per square inch for soil-applied chemicals.

To increase the gallonage flowing through the sprayer, larger nozzle tips should be used rather than increasing the pressure. To double the flow, the pressure must be increased by four times, making this an ineffective way to increase gallonage. This also reduces the effectiveness of the application by producing a misting spray pattern.

The best nozzle size is the largest one that will provide the desired volume. Nozzles should be clean, as should all screens, strainers and tanks. Check the accuracy of the pressure gauge, since this was one of the more important causes of inaccurate application in the University of Nebraska study.

2. Figure chemical costs per acre, not per gallon. The cost per gallon can be misleading, since for some chemicals only small quantites are needed on each acre.

To figure cost per acre, simply divide the cost per gallon by the number of acres it covers.

3. Don't buy more weed control than you need. Match the herbicides used to the weeds that really need to be controlled. To do this, make a list of the weeds typically found in each field and compare that against the control offered by available herbicides. The lowest-cost product which controls the weeds will be your best buy, and buying any additional weed spectrum will be unnecessary expense.

One good broad-spectrum foundation herbicide may come so close to the desired weed spectrum that cultivation may be substituted for an additional chemical in combination. If a tank mix is needed, starting with a dependable preplant herbicide which controls both grasses and some broadleaf weeds can minimize the cost of an additional product.

While checking the labels, make sure the rates used are proper for the soil type. Using an excessive rate was once considered cheap insurance; now it is more costly.

The secret of success in herbicide use is accuracy, not scrimping. Poor weed control can easily lose 3 bushels per acre or abour $18, which is enough to pay for the most effective, long-lasting preplant herbicide tank mix on the market.

4. Watch cash flow. Costs can seem low if cash flowing in meets the need for cash flowing out. Forecasting the need for cash is useful, and can assist in planning sales of grain or livestock, or other cash-generating activities. Sometimes purchases can be made early if cash is available, resulting in price discounts. When these

1) Measure 204 feet in your field (This distance is for a 20-inch nozzle spacing. For other spacings, see note below.)
2) Drive your tractor 204 feet at spraying speed and time it with a stopwatch. (Example: Let's say it takes 30 seconds to cover 204 feet.)
3) Park the tractor, set your sprayer at application pressure and spray water through it. Catch all the water coming from one nozzle for the amount of time it took to go 204 feet. (30 seconds in the example)
4) The ounces caught per nozzle equal the gallons applied per acre. (Example: If you catch 18 ounces in 30 seconds, you are spraying 18 gallons per acre.)
5) Mix the chemical needed per acre with the gallons of water per acre indicated. (Example: To apply two pints of Sonalan per acre, put in two pints of Sonalan for each 18 gallons of spray.)

discounts exceed the farmer's borrowing rate, this is usually a wise business decision, and reduces costs.

Note that cash in hand is worth more than cash received later. For example, if a farmer can selct chemicals that save $10 per acre in the spring, that is equivalent to receiving an extra $10.60 per acre at harvest time, at a typical 12 percent interest rate. Savings in that range are easily possible by using low-cost preplant herbicides, rather than more expensive preemergence products or post plant over-top sprays.

White Oaks taps Miller

ELIZABETHTOWN, Pa. – White Oak Mills has selected J. Meredith Miller, 39, Manheim, as the company controller. Owners John and Mark Wagner noted that Miller comes to the firm with 20 years of experience in data processing, computer operations and auditing.

The 1963 graduate of Manheim Central High School was trained in data processing at Pierce School of Business, Philadelphia, before joining Armstrong World Industries in 1964. He became a computer operator, a computer programmer and finally a data processing auditor.

White Oak recently acquired Grubb Supply in Elizabethtown and moved the corporate headquarters to the Grubb facility. In addition to the "White Oak" brand of swine feeds and swine herd services, White Oak now offers the "Garden Spot" line of dairy feeds and services previously available from Grubb.

Miller is developing an automated billing system and account tracking to lower the cost of doing business and pass the savings on to the farmer.

MAMMA emphasizes calcium in dairy advertising

TOWSON, Md. – The Advertising and Promotion Agency of the Middle Atlantic Milk Marketing Area (MAMMA) moved at its recent second quarter planning meeting to expand the viewing audience it targets with its milk advertising. MAMMA's Board of Directors also voted to place major emphasis on milk's calcium content in coming months.

At the meeting approval was given to begin airing new versions of MAMMA's "Nine to Five" and "Foods For Fitness" television commercials. The two commercials, which position milk and dairy foods as fitness foods, have been updated to key the consumer in to the availability of calcium in milk and dairy products. New voice overs in the commercials tell the consumer, "Your body needs the calcium in milk to keep your bones healthy, strong and young. Because even when you stop growing, your bones never stop changing. Milk. A natural source of calcium to keep your bones healthy, strong and young."

A totally new and innovative television commercial called "Olympic Calcium" was also given approval to start airing. The newest commercial in the "Fitness You Can Drink" campaign features 62-year-old gymnast Helen Schifano Sjursen. Sjursen was a member of the first women's Olympic Team in 1948 and still maintains an active lifestyle. The commercial is directed primarily at women, who as a group fail to consume an adequate amount of calcium in their daily intake. The commercial was created to have wide appeal among women of all ages in order to promote increased consumption of milk. W.B. Doner and Company Advertising created the commercial for MAMMA.

W.B. Doner was also given the go ahead by the MAMMA borad to develop a commercial to target the large urban population in the Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, and Harrisburg metropolitan areas. To reach this audience with the Milk Fitness theme the Board voted to contract John Thompson, coach of the NCAA Basketball Champion, Georgetown Hoyas. Coach Thompson, is an avowed milk drinker and usually drinks a large glass after every Georgetown game. MAMMA plans to go on air with this exciting new commercial during the NCAA playoffs later this month and go back on air when the basketball season resumes in the fall.

In other actions, the board approved resigning baseball greats Mike Schmidt and Cal Ripken, Jr. as milk spokesperson.

Jan Harding, program director of the Pennsylvania Dairy Princess Program, reported on the recent and upcoming activities of the princess program and thanked the Board for their continued support.

Ken Theisse, foodservice coordinator for the American Dairy Association, presented to the Board, ADA's intentions for creating new foodservice promotion materials. The Board voted to contribute funding for the development of those materials.

Following the business meeting which was held at Hunt Valley Marriot the Board dined with milkspokesman, Cal Ripken, Jr. who lives nearby. Ripken shared with the Board some of his experiences as a major league ball player. Said Ripken, "I like very much being associated with milk. Even when I'm in California people tell me, 'Drink your milk, Cal.'"

Brockett's Ag Advice

By John E. Brockett
Farm Management Agent
Lewistown Extension Office

It doesn't make any difference what the ground hog says. Spring is not far away. With spring comes spring work, especially planting then haying (or haying then planting). Are you ready?

Do you have the drill ready to go? Are the bolts that came loose last year replaced? What about the mower teeth–were they sharpened or replaced? Then there are the belts, shear bolts, cotter keys, gears, slip clutches, guards, etc. Some will need to be replaced–some will need tightened–some need greased. They all need to be checked. Stupid part-time farmers like me can let these things go because we do have another source of income. People who rely on farm income as a source of living will be in trouble if they let maintenance go until the last minute.

LIME & FERTILIZER

Do you have it written down somewhere? You know what I mean–where is the 0-0-60 to go? You have it in your head–what if you are at a sale when it arrives? Or if you are like my young son Mark–every once in a while he says, "my head forgot".

Did you budget out what you needed? If so, it becomes even more vital for you to have a plan map. Where it goes–how much–when.

Are you sure you need 0-0-60? Did you soil test or is it just a guess? Part of financial management is making every dollar you put into your farm return at least two dollars to you. Today's high costs should prevent luxury expenses–those that are done because you are in too much of a hurry to figure what you really need.

SEEDS, TWINE, CHEMICALS

Sure, these are ordered and in the barn or gargage or shed or to be delivered. Or are they? If you haven't made arrangements for that custom operator, get over there and see him.

Know what you want. It will save you time and money and the operator will be able to serve you better. It is a real bummer to be ready to go but not know whether you need that spray on before or after planting or before or after the plants come up.

Some counties have crop management associations. They can be a valuable asset if they are used properly. Like DHIA, they are only useful if used for management decisions. If you join one just to join it, then ignore the suggestions, don't bother joining.

If you use it properly, you could save the cost of membeship in savings on fertilizer, chemicals, seeds, and time.

One of the biggest advantages of these groups is the opportunity to have a unified, record program that can give you a lot of valuable, historic information on each field and each crop.

It does take a little more work to keep the records. But, like a lot of other things, you'll only get out of record keeping what you put into it.

Dog Law enforcement to escalate in Lancaster Co.

SUMMERDALE – Lancaster County is the focal point of a regional surveillance for unlicensed dogs by state dog wardens during the next several weeks, according to Lester Young, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture's Regional Dog Law Supervisor.

"The Department of Agriculture strongly encourages dog owners to license their pet. A state dog license, which can be obtained through the county treasurer's office, is an inexpensive way to protect its well-being," said Young, "providing a means of identification in case the animal becomes lost," he added.

In the effort, a comprehensive canvas by State Dog Wardens has been scheduled in Lancaster County from April to June. "Owners of dogs found without a current license or with dogs running at large can be fined up to $300 plus costs," Young cautioned. No warnings are being given.

Any dog six months or older is required by law to have a license. Fees are $3 for spayed and neutered dogs and $5 for all other dogs. Dog owners mailing the fee to the county treasurer's office must include a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Senior citizens 65 and older pay only $1.75 for non-productive dogs and $2.75 for all other dogs, and must present proof of age.

Owners should provide proof of spaying or neutering when applying for their pet's license.

Lancaster County Dog Warden Gene Grove has a 24-hour answering service to receive calls seven days a week. His telephone number is 653-4601.

Don't send an ordinary herbicide to do a tough herbicide's job.

Send Eradicane® Extra.
Selective Herbicide

Any cornfield with a history of heavy infestations of hard-to-control weeds is the wrong territory for an ordinary herbicide. You have to call in the specialist, Eradicane Extra, the preplant specially designed to give you consistent, dependable control of the toughest weeds in corn.

Eradicane Extra, tank-mixed with atrazine or Bladex,* is tough enough to knock out rough weeds like quackgrass, nutsedge and velvetleaf. And wild cane, Johnsongrass, fall panicum, foxtails, and many other grasses and broadleaves.

This spring, for the best control of the tough weeds in corn, send in the tough weed specialist, Eradicane Extra.

Farm Talk

Jerry Webb

Editor's Note: In last week's column, Jerry Webb wrote about a picture book called "Farm Town." Grant Heilman of Lititz, who published the book, has been deluged with requests for "Farm Town," which is currently out of print.

However, Heilman is hoping that the book will be back in print in about a year. If you are interested in getting a copy, send your name, address and request to Heilman Photography, 506 W. Lincoln Ave., Lititz, Pa. 17543, and they will notify you if and when the book is back in print.

Everybody wants to cut the federal budget until it starts to affect their pet projects. And maybe that's what I'm doing, defending one of my pet projects. But when it comes to budget cutting I can't see the elimination of the Soil Conservation Service as any part of the solution.

I have no particular stake in soil conservation. Let me mention that up front. My wife and I own something less than an acre with a home on it. I'm not on the Soil Conservation Service payroll - not even involved with that Department of Agriculture agency in any close way. But I do have strong feelings about soil conservation.

Maybe it all started when I was a third or fourth grader in a one room Missouri school and I was presented with a badge that designated me a Nature Knight. As I remember, that was part of an educational effort operated within the school system to educate rural youngsters about the importance of conservation, soil and otherwise. I'm also old enough to remember a little bit about the dust bowl era and to be keenly aware of what happens to a farm when good soil conservation practices are abandoned.

We used to hunt over those worn out Ozarks farms, my brothers and I as teenagers. You could hide standing up in the gullies. You could look out over a field and lose a small herd of milk cows huddled in a wash seeking shelter from a cold northwest wind.

Farmers check-rowed their corn in those days. That meant it was cultivated up and down and back and forth as many as 4 or 5 times a summer. You can just imagine the soil erosion that went on. But then there developed an awareness of soil conservation starting in the late 30's and continuing through World War II and into the 50's. Contour farming, terracing, wind breaks, grass waterways, strip cropping and on down the list of soil conservation techniques all advanced by the local Soil Conservation Service office.

As a young county extension agent I recall working very closely with the county soil conservationist to coordinate good farm practices with good soil saving techniques.

Soil conservation is important to me, as it is or should be to millions of American citizens. We have only a few inches of usable top soil and despite gallant efforts by the Soil Conservation Service, by farmers, agricultural educators and others, we are still losing soil at an alarming rate.

Maybe that doesn't matter as long as we wallow in agricultural surpluses. But the day can't be very far away in soil-building terms when that thin layer of top soil is going to run out along with our bountiful food supply. Then we will be starving like some African nations are already.

Top soil is very difficult to produce. When it's gone, it seldom returns. Oh sure, there are examples of conscientious farmers who have taken worn out, washed out, run down farms and built them up. But it's a very slow, painstaking and expensive process.

It's not as simple as planting trees when the forests become endangered or posting no hunting signs when the deer start to get scarce. Soil conservation is a year-round, highly technical process that involves a lot of effort, considerable inconvenience and some expense. To eliminate the Soil Conservation Service, the technical basis for this national effort is unthinkable.

No doubt, there is some waste in this part of the government as there is in most other parts. But that doesn't justify elimination. In fact, as we look toward the next century and the food-producing capability of American agriculture we need to think about expanding the Soil Conservation Service so that bountiful harvests will continue and the excesses of wind and water erosion can be eliminated. We need to step up the effort to increase the awareness on the part of farmers and others to the need for soil conservation. And we need to find additional funding whether it be public or private to help farmers struggle with this awesome task.

I'm convinced that the job of soil conservation is too important to leave in the hands of those who own or till the soil. There was a time in our distant past when a farmer could wear out a farm and simply move West. That's how this great nation was settled.

We're still moving West in the sense of plowing western range land that is submarginal as agricultural land.

But there are no new lands to conquer and so we can no longer allow the level of soil conservation to rest strictly with the farming ability and financial success of a particular farmer. That's where the Soil Conservation Service will play an increasingly important role in the future.

The federal budget must be reduced and probably the Soil Conservation Service should withstand a fair share of budget cutting. That's part of the short range solution to a national problem.

In the long run, however, agriculture, in fact the entire American economy and well being, depends on a continuing and increasing soil conservation awareness. That end will not be served by eliminating the technical support arm of a national soil conservation effort.

Drug company accused of false calcium advertising

ARLINGTON, Va. – Joseph J. Westwater, Chief Executive Officer of the National Dairy Board, today filed a complaint with the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) alleging that Marion Laboratories of Kansas City, Mo , placed a false and misleading advertisement for "Os-Cal," a calcium supplement.

"The ad in the March, 1985 issue of Health Magazine falsely states that a person would need to eat three pounds of cheddar cheese to meet the recommended daily allowance of calcium, when only four ounces would more than meet that need for most adults," Westwater said.

The advertisement stated, "Just 8 ounces of sardines will provide you with a full day's supply of calcium. Three pounds of cheddar cheese will do the same thing."

The "Os-Cal" ad also contained a chart on the calcium content of various foods. According to the chart, 10 ounces of cheddar cheese would provide 213 mg. of calcium.

Citing sources from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the Board's complaint stated that 10 ounces of cheddar cheese would provide nearly 10 times that amount – 2,040 milligrams.

The "Os-Cal" ad is "blatantly false and misleading information and does a grave disservice to the American dairy industry, to consumers, and to the concept of truth in advertising," said Westwater.

"Dairymen will not tolerate the publication or dissemination of erroneous information on dairy foods that could negatively affect consumption, and the National Dairy Board will take every necessary action to make that clear," Westwater said.

He went on to note, "If the FTC finds that the ad contained false and misleading information, it has the authority to demand Marion Labs provide notice that it was false, and correct the impressions the advertising has created."

The Board chose to file a formal complaint, rather than taking the simpler option of just notifying the FTC of the inaccurate advertising.

In a telegram to Marion Labs, maker of "Os-Cal," the National Dairy Board also demanded that it withdraw the advertisement immediately. Westwater's telegram said, in part, "While I'm glad to see pharmaceutical companies increasing the public awareness of the dangers of osteoporosis and the need for calcium, you must get your facts straight."

Stated Westwater, "Dairymen are taking an agressive posture in the marketplace now. As our Board members have said, the National Dairy Board will not sit idly by and watch consumers and dollars flow to the pharmaceutical industry – not when dairy farmers produce the diet's most abundant source of calcium."

The National Dairy Promotion and Research Board was established by Act of Congress to develop a coordinated program of promotion designed to strengthen the dairy industry's position in the marketplace and to maintain and expand domestic and foreign markets and uses for fluid milk and dairy products.

This national program of promotion, research and nutrition education is financed by a mandatory 15-cent per hundredweight assessment on all milk produced and marketed in the contiguous 48 states. The 36-member policy-making Board is composed of dairy producers.

Maryland honors record '84 crop production

The Maryland Crop Improvement Association saluted last year's new state yield records for both corn and soybean production under non-irrigated conditions during its 78th annual meeting in the Tidewater Inn at Easton.

But the over-all corn yield winner–for the fourth consecutive year–is an irrigation farmer from Caroline County, on Maryland's central Eastern Shore. The perennial champion is William G. Greenage, operator of Beechwood Farms at Preston.

Greenage's winning 1984 yield was 215.78 bushels per acre. He had state champion yields at 227.87 and 227.47 bushels per acre in 1983 and 1982, respectively. His 1981 winning mark of 244.8 bushels per acre still stands as the all-time Maryland record.

Greenage planted last year's championship field on April 13, using DeKalb 789 hybrid corn at a final field population of 27,000 plants per acre. As in the previous year, he used a center pivot irrigation system to apply 12 inches of water during the growing season.

His son, Billy Greenage of Preston, placed third in the over-all state corn yield results for 1984 with 207.18 bushels per acre. The younger Greenage planted DeKalb T1100 hybrid corn at a final population of 22,500 plants per acre. All other management factors were the same as those used by his father.

Edward Hancock of Snow Hill (Worcester County) was runnerup in the over-all Maryland corn yield results last year with 212.11 bushels per acre, using a Pioneer hybrid variety.

His achievement broke the previous state record of 207.59 bushels per acre for corn grown under non-irrigated conditions. The old mark had stood since 1965. It was set by a Talbot County farm partnership.

Another Worcester County farmer, Oliver J. Smith, Jr., of Bishopville, placed fourth in the 1984 over-all Maryland corn yield contest with 205.369 bushels of corn per acre. He used DeKalb XL 61 hybrid under non-irrigated cropping conditions.

The Taylor brothers of Preston (Caroline County) applied six tons of poultry manure per acre to place fifth in the standings with 204.54 bushels per acre of irrigated corn. They planted Pioneer 3320 on April 13. The brothers had placed third in the 1983 state contest with an irrigated yield of 204.81 bushels per acre.

Balvin B. Brinsfield, Jr., of Reids Grove (Dorchester County) moved up to sixth place in the 1984 over-all Maryland corn yield placings with 204.2 bushels per acre, using an Agway hybrid variety. He received a plaque from the Chevron Chemical Company for placing first in the state among no-till growers using irrigation. In 1983 he had placed 15th in the state corn contest with a yield of 182.22 bushels per acre.

Another Dorchester County farmer, Dennis A. [illegible] of Brookview, placed seventh in last year's over-all Maryland corn yield standings with 202.6 bushels per acre on no-till, irrigated cropland. In 1983 he placed fifth with 197.92 bushels per acre.

E. Kenneth Stonesifer of Still Pond (Kent County) repeated his 1983 achievement as Maryland's top producer of no-till corn grown under non-irrigated conditions. Last year's mark of 200.26 bushels per acre with Pioneer 3320 qualified for eighth in the over-all standings. In 1983 his winning non-irrigated, no-till yield of 180.6 bushels per acre was good for 16th place.

Ninth through fifteenth placings in the 1984 over-all Maryland corn yield contest were as follows:

9. William V. Riggs of Bloomfield (Queen Annes County), 199.92 bushels per acre; DeKalb T1100 hybrid corn, non-irrigated. Riggs placed first among Maryland contestants in the non-irrigated division of the National Corn Growers Association yield contest for 1984.

10. Robert J. Bassett of Ironshire (Worcester County), 198.717 bushels per acre; DeKalb T1100 hybrid corn, non-irrigated.

11. John M. Cohee, Jr., of Preston (Caroline County), 197.17 bushels per acre; DeKalb T1100 hybrid corn, irrigated; chicken manure applied.

12. James F. Hall III of Church Hill (Queen Annes County), 195.49 bushels per acre; DeKalb XL 71, non-irrigated.

13. Robert W. Clark, Jr., of Still Pond Creek (Kent County), 193.18 bushels per acre; Gutwein 69B, non-irrigated.

14. Mason Farms, operated by William I. Mason and son of Ruthsburgh (Queen Annes County), 193.14 bushels per acre; DeKalb 6060, irrigated. The Masons placed first among Maryland contestants in the irrigated division of the National Corn Growers Association yield contest for 1984.

15. George Gunther of Starr (Queen Annes County), 190.09 bushels per acre; DeKalb T1100 hybrid corn, non-irrigated.

As in three previous years, all of the corn growers cited from Caroline and Dorchester counties were participants in irrigation education projects conducted by agricultural agents from the University of Maryland's Cooperative Extension Service.

Average yield for the top 15 growers in the 1984 Maryland corn contest was 201.32 bushels per acre. This compares with "top 15" averages of 195.91 bushels per acre in 1983; 198.73 in 1982; 192.6 in 1981, and 167.11 in 1980.

Corn yields throughout the state last year averaged 118 bushels per acre–a new state record, according to the Maryland-Delaware Crop Reporting Service. The previous all-time high was 107 bushels per acre in 1982. Earlier statewide yield averages were 105 bushels per acre in 1981; 72 in 1980, and 99 in 1979.

The official state corn yield contest has been conducted each year since 1952 as part of the crop improvement program of the University of Maryland's Cooperative Extension Service.

Yield measurements are supervised by Extension agricultural agents in participating counties. Awards to state winners are presented each year by the Maryland Crop Improvement Association and the Chevron Chemical Company. An official state soybean yield contest has been conducted in a similar manner for 14 years.

Maryland soybean winners

COLLEGE PARK, MD – Non-irrigated, full-season soybeans were top performers for Eastern Shore farmers in the 1984 official Maryland soybean yield contest. And the winning yield set a new state record.

For the fifth time in the last six years, the state soybean championship plaque went to a Talbot County farming operation during the 78th annual meeting of the Maryland Crop Improvement Association.

The latest winner is Charles T. (Tim) Bishop of Easton, with a record-setting 1984 yield of 71.6 bushels per acre. He planted Jacques 130 soybeans on June 12 in 19-inch rows, using minimum tillage and liquid fertilizer.

Bishop also planted Jacques 130 full-season soybeans on his Winona Farm near Queenstown (Queen Annes County), using no-till and foliar feeding. This field went 64.34 bushels per acre in the official yield test.

Thus, Bishop established a "first" by finishing first and second in the over-all state soybean yield contest. And he won both the conventional and no-till championship plaques in the non-irrigated category at last week's award banquet in Easton.

Weer and Company of Goldsboro (Caroline County) placed third in the 1984 over-all Maryland soybean standings. Their non-irrigated Coker 425 variety went 63.9 bushels per acre, no-till, double-cropped.

Leonard Twining of Princess Anne (Somerset County) was fourth in the over-all standings with a yield of 63.7 bushles per acre, non-irrigated. He planted full-season Essex soybeans in 30-inch rows, using conventional tillage.

Fowling Creek Farms of Harmony (Caroline County) placed fifth with 61.72 bushels per acre. They raised full-season Union soybeans, using irrigation and conventional tillage.

John (Jack) King of Oriole (Somerset County) and Gustav A. Schlag of Wittman (Talbot County) tied for sixth place in the 1984 Maryland over-all soybean standings with identical yields of 61.6 bushels per acre. Both had full-season Essex soybeans, using conventional tillage, non-irrigated.

Eighth through fifteenth placings in the official 1984 state soybean yield contest were as follows:

8. Arthur W. Lankford, Jr., of Pocomoke City (Somerset County), 60.5 bushels per acre; Union soybeans, drilled; double-cropped after barley.

9. H.T. Slaughter of Easton (Talbot County), 60.2 bushels per acre; Jacques 130 soybeans in 19-inch rows, non-irrigated.

10. Sherman Councell III of Goldsboro (Caroline County), 59.5 bushels per acre; full-season Union soybeans, irrigated.

11. Wayne Holland of Pocomoke City (Somerset County), 58.9 bushels per acre; Essex soybeans, drilled; double-cropped, non-irrigated.

12. Taylor brothers of Preston (Caroline County), 58.77 bushels per acre; Asgrow 5475 soybeans, double-cropped. The Taylors received a plaque from Chevron Chemical Company for placing first in the state contest among irrigated, no-till soybean growers.

13. Paul Segrist of Pocomoke City (Somerset County), 58.7 bushels per acre; full-season Essex soybeans in 19-inch rows, non-irrigated.

14. Jack King of Oriole (Somerset County), 58.4 bushels per acre; Essex soybeans in 15-inch rows, double-cropped after wheat, non-irrigated.

15. Carroll Ennis of Princess Anne (Somerset County), 58.3 bushels per acre; full-season Essex soybeans in 30-inch rows, conventional tillage, non-irrigated.

Average yield for the top 10 entries in the official 1984 Maryland soybean yield contest was 62.87 bushels per acre. This barley surpassed the 1983 drought year "top 10" average of 62.54. It fell short of the 64.67 bushel-per-acre mark set in the 1982 contest.

By comparison, the statewide average soybean yield in 1984 was 29 bushels per acre, according to the Maryland-Delaware Crop Reporting Service. This equalled the statewide average set in 1982. The 1983 statewide average was 26 bushels per acre.

The official Maryland soybean yield contest has been conducted regularly for 14 years as part of the crop improvement programs of the University of Maryland's Cooperative Extension Service.

Yield measurements are supervised by Extension agricultural agents in participating counties. Awards to state winners are presented each year by the Maryland Crop Improvement Association and the Chevron Chemical Company. An official statewide corn yield contest has been conducted in a similar manner since 1952.

Crawford Co. honors five

MEADVILLE – Five Crawford County farmers were honored for their corn and alfalfa production at the 17th Annual Crawford County Corn & Forage Day sponsored by the Crawford County Office of the Penn State Cooperative Extension Service and 32 seed, feed, fertilizer, chemical and equipment dealers.

Robert Campbell, R. D. 2, Saegertown and John W. Greene, Jr., R. D. 2, Springboro were recognized for corn production. Campbell grew 131.2 bushels of Funks 414A corn variety. The corn was planted in 34 inch rows with 25,180 plants per acre. The moisture content of the corn at harvest was 26.1 percent.

John Greene, Jr.'s corn yield was 123.5 bushels per acre of Funks 4256 variety. His corn was no-till, planted in 30-inch rows with a plant population of 24,322 plants per acre. The moisture content of the corn at harvest was 26.4 percent. John also had a three-year average production of 130.4 bushels per acre.

Both of these men were enrolled in the Pennsylvania Five-Acre Corn Club sponsored by the Pennsylvania Master Corn Growers' Association, Inc., Penn State Extension and the Crawford County Corn and Forage Day.

The other three farmers were recognized for achievements in alfalfa production in the 1984 Pennsylvania Alfalfa Growers' Program. Those receiving plaques were John Tautin, Sr., R. D. 3, Conneautville, who produced 7.37 tons of alflafa per acre in four cuttings. Last year in the same field John produced 5.71 tons of alfalfa per acre. The protein content ranged from 22.63 percent to 27.80 percent.

Scott J. Preston, R. D. 3, Centerville, produced 6.78 tons of alfalfa per acre with four cuttings. The protein content ranged from 20.76 percent to 25.08 percent.

Timothy Proper, R. D. 1, Townville, produced 5.59 tons of alfalfa per acre with four cuttings with the protein range of 18.18 percent to 29.51 percent.

The yield average for all farmers enrolled in the Pennsylvania Alfalfa Growers' Program was 6.2 tons per acre. The cost of establishing and harvesting an acre of alfalfa, according to the information supplied by the growers, was $291.37 per acre.

The cost of establishing and harvesting an acre of corn, according to those enrolled in the Five-Acre Corn Club, was $231.55 per acre.

All five farmers were awarded plaques sponsored by the Crawford County Corn & Forage Day Program.

Alfalfa growers demand the best.

Alfalfa growers expect the most from their alfalfa variety. Like the highest yield, the best quality and multiple pest resistance. That's why more and more growers are planting Cimarron Alfalfa.

Profit with a proven variety. Cimarron is consistently a top producing alfalfa, both on the farm and in university tests – not only in total yield but in crude protein content and TDN. It's an extra leafy/full season variety with excellent stand persistence.

Cimarron offers resistance to a broad spectrum of diseases and insects such as Phytophthora root rot, bacterial wilt, Fusarium wilt, anthracnose, Sclerotinia crown and stem rot, Stemphylium leaf spot, common leaf spot, pea aphids, spotted alfalfa aphids and the alfalfa weevil. No other variety can match Cimarron's combined pest resistance.

High yield...extra leafiness...excellent quality... multiple pest resistance.

Agribusiness execs to meet at Cornell, June 17-28

ITHACA, NY – Management personnel from business and government who serve the agricultural sector of the economy are invited to Cornell University from June 17-28 for the 22nd Annual Cornell Agribusiness Executives Program.

Sponsored by the New York State College of Agriculture and Life Sciences and the Samuel Curtis Johnson Graduate School of Management, both at Cornell, the intensive, two-week program is the only one of its kind in the nation.

"The program brings together key agribusiness executives and qualified academic personnel to explore the increasingly complex responsibilities management faces in this time of political, economic, social, and technological change," says Richard D. Aplin, professor of business management and co-director of the agribusiness executives program at Cornell.

The agribusiness executives program concentrates on various aspects of long-range planning that provide a sound base for future decision-making, Aplin says. "Never before have businesses been exposed to so many internal and external pressures. Recent developments in food, fiber, finance, farm supply, and farm service industries call for new, broader outlooks on the part of agribusiness firms."

Designed for top-and upper middle-level management personnel, the program this year will focus on capital budgeting and finance; the challenge of the economic environment for managenent; formulating business strategies; personal finance and investments; agribusiness marketi counting for planning and control; and the impact and implications of agricultural policies.

Program instructors, all from Cornell, include: Aplin; Bruce L. Anderson, program co-director and associate professor of business management and marketing; Jerome Hass, professor of managerial economics and finance; Kenneth Robinson, professor of agricultural economics; George Staller, professor of economics; and Robert Swieringa, professor of accounting.

A special workshop series– "Frontiers of Agricultural Science" – will be taught by Robert Barker, provost of Cornell; J. Murray Elliot, chairman of the department of animal science; and Norman Scott, director of Cornell's Agricultural Experiment Station and director of the office of research of the College of Agriculture and Life Sciences at Cornell.

To ensure maximum individual participation in the seminar program, enrollment will be limited. For further information, contact Clara Travis, Agribusiness Executives Program, 305 Warren Hall, Cornell University, Ithaca, NY 14853-7801, or call (607) 256-3068.

Soybean group tries to cash in on Sweden's meatball madness

Meatball madness, it can be incurable. Once you've had a taste of delectable Swedish meatballs, you'll wake up in the middle of the night craving one more bite of meatball... Yum!

That's the craving U.S. soybean farmers are banking on to crack Sweden's meatball market. And the way the ball is bouncing, their prospects look good: If you live in Sweden, soy protein may soon be added to the list of secret ingredients in Mom's Meatballs.

Joseph Zak is European market development division manager for the American Soybean Association. Through farmer-funded projects, the Soybean Association builds new soybean markets in Europe and around the world.

Zak says that Sweden's eight million consumers face a crunching price increase in the cost of meat. In the last three years, meat prices in Sweden have increased rapidly as a result of drastically reduced government subsidies. In 1984, Swedish consumers spent approximately $2.5 billion for meat products. That's 25 percent more than they spent on meat in 1982, and it represents more than 20 percent of their annual food budget.

So what's a meatball maker to do? Zak says that soy protein can cut the high cost of meatballs. And the best news: Swedish meatball lovers don't have to sacrifice that tantalizing meatball taste.

A recent meatball taste test in Sweden proved that when soy protein is used correctly, it can sway even the firmest of meatball lovers... and soy cuts meatball costs by 30 percent.

Zak says that soy protein is not a major market for U.S. soybeans, but it is an important market.

"In countries like Sweden, consumers face snowballing meat prices: It's a chilling situation," says Zak. "Soy protein can cut high meat costs without cutting nutritional value. We have to be progressive and look towards this future area of soybean demand — or we could get left in the cold."

Is the meatball market a testing ground for soy protein? "Time will tell," says Zak. His advice, "Keep your eye on the ball — the meatball that is — and watch your soybean markets grow."

When to call it quits

Farmers in financial trouble are face-to-face with the hardest decision of their lives this year — whether or not to continue farming. A Penn State Extension farm management specialist says strategic planning can ease the pain of either choice.

"It's a soul-searching, heart-breaking decision many farmers must face," Jesse Cooper says. "If a farmer's annual profit and loss statements show continual losses, and his already low equities continue to drop, I'd ask him if it was reasonable to think he could hang on to his farming operation. Maybe he should bite the bullet and get out of farming. Should he cut back his operation by selling assets and reducing his operation's size? Should he leave farming altogether?"

Farmers who decide to find a second job off the farm, or to leave the farm entirely, should plan their future employment, Cooper says.

"First of all, you have to look at your potential and your capabilities," he says. "What are you good at? What characteristics do you have that someone else in the community wants? Analyze yourself. Recognize your unique characteristics."

Since many farmers already have extensive work experience with farm livestock and equipment, Cooper says, they could look for industrial or farm service positions involving animals or machinery. Older workers could try somthing in the line of management or counseling, since their farm experiences, both good and bad, could prove useful to new farmers.

If off-farm employment doesn't turn up immediately, the farmer shouldn't give up looking, Cooper emphasizes.

"In today's market, persistence is a major factor," he says. "If a prospective employer doesn't come up with a job the first time you apply for one, that doesn't mean you should forget about it."

Another way to bring income into a farming operation is to sell farm assets that aren't absolutely essential, Cooper says.

"A farmer may have assets that he could sell off — timber, coal or other minerals, excess machinery," he says. "He should certainly look at his own labor force, because family members can often find another job to help out."

Some farmers have lost all their equity and are so deeply in debt that their only option will be leaving the farm. Cooper advises farmers in this predicament to "take it slow, if possible."

"Spread the process out over a period of time, and make gradual adjustments," he says. "It's not a decision that should be made lightly, yet some farmers throw up their hands in the middle of the day and say 'I quit.' They sell everything and take off. That's not wise."

Cooper recommends the farmer talks with creditors, accountants, county extension agents, or anyone else they trust. Farmers who lived through the Depression are also good sources, he adds.

Farmers leaving the farm can make excellent contributions to the labor force if given the chance, Cooper concludes.

"They are versatile, they learn very quickly, and they posess many of the basic skills that are needed every day," he says. "Most importantly, they have their rural work ethic. They may be a bit older, but they get the job done, and employers appreciate that."

Maryland dairy reproduction workshops extended

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — A winter snowstorm cancellation and high interest from dairy farmers have prompted the University of Maryland's Cooperative Extension Service to stretch its 1985 Profitable and Efficient Production (PEP) winter educational workshop season into April.

Mark A. Varner, Extension dairy management specialist at College Park, reports than an additional training session has been added to the nine already scheduled during January, February and March in nine counties, covering the state's northern tier from western Maryland to the Eastern Shore.

The new workshop is set for April 4, 8 and 16 at the Washington County Extension office, 101 W. Antietam Street, in downtown Hagerstown. Each day's session will run from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

A rescheduled workshop will be held April 9 and 10 in southern Garrett County at the Old Swan Meadow school, located along highway 219 south of Oakland. Those sessions will run from 9 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. They replace a workshop, originally set for Jan. 22 and 23, which was cancelled because of a snowstorm.

According to Dr. Varner, this year's workshops represent Phase III in a three-year statewide educational program for dairy farmers. The goal of this year's PEP program is to help participants put together a total reproductive management effort which integrates herd health, nutrition and genetics. A first-of-its-kind manual, Dairy Integrated Reproductive Management, is being used as a text for this year's workshops.

The workshop sessions include lectures from University of Maryland Extension specialists and panel discussions with local veterinarians. There also are laboratory periods where participants have opportunity to dissect the reproductive tract of a cow.

Registration charges are in the range of $20 to $30 for each two or three-day workshop. This cost includes a copy of the course manual.

Interested dairy farmers from anywhere in the state, who haven't had the opportunity to attend one of the earlier workshops, may register if space permits. Contact your local county Extension agricultural agent for details.

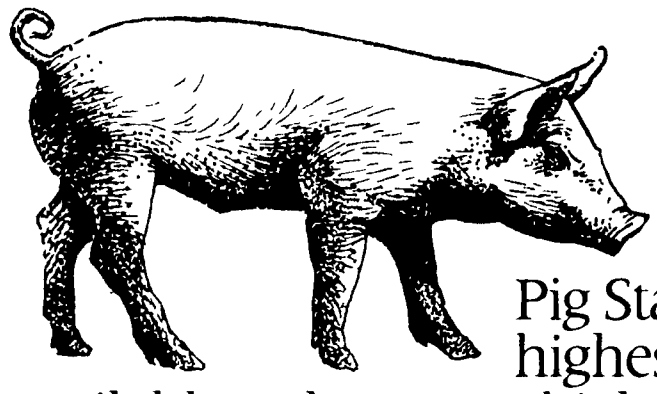
Put pigs through the nursery faster.

With new High Octane® FastStart™ Pig Starter Chow.®

brand ration



New High Octane® FastStart™ Pig Starter Chow® brand ration has the highest energy and nutrient levels available today. Even higher than our own high-energy starter feeds. The result is a 10% increase in the growth rate and 9% increase in the feed conversion rate you'd ordinarily get. And that means you can send pigs in and out of the nursery in 5 days less time.

So, if you're looking for the highest performance you can buy, stop in. I'd be happy to show you the way to better growth for your starter pigs and higher returns for you.

Here's the proof on groups of feeder pigs on FastStart™ using Kleen Leen breeding stock.
